Andropov misses Red Square parade

From Richard Owen Moscow

President Andropov's absence from the annual parade on Red Square yesterday has intensified speculation about his ability to run the Soviet Union, although his portrait dominated proceedings and his name was constantly invoked.

Mr Andropov' absence from the traditional Kremlin celebrations marking the anniver-sary of the Bolshevik Revol-ution last Saturday sparked off a wave of rumours about his health. He has not been seen in public for nearly three months. He suffers from a kidney coplaint as well as heart allments. Soviet officials insist that he has a cold.

No Soviet leader had previously missed the November 7 parade. It is an occasion for reaffirming national unity, military power and faith in the communist future. Giant portraits of Mr Andropov were carried on floats, accompanied by quotations from his speechnd blow-ups of his October 27 interview in Prarda on sums

As was the Kremlin on Saturday, the Polithuro yesterday was led by Mr Konstant in Chernenko, aged 71, who unsuccessfully challenged Mr Andropov for the leadership last year after Mr Brezhnevs death. Mr Mikhail Gorbachov. Mr Grigoriy Romanov and Mr Geidar Aliyev, the leading contenders for the succession, stood further along, the small and dapper Mr Romanovexchanging jokes companionably with the bulkier Mr Aliyev.

The two men are manouevring to build up rival power bases within the party, al-though Mr Aliyev arouses antagonism because he comes from Azerbaijan, where he made his career with the KGB, and Mr Romanov is handi capped by the fact that his power base is in Leningrad, where he was party leader until June this year.

Marshal Ustinov, the Defence Minister, attacked the United States in a speech from the Mausoleum, accusing Washington of launching an unprecedented arms race and organizing "provocations" – a reference to the crisis over the shooting down of the Korean airliner. He repeated earlier warnings that Moscow would station missiles in Eastern Europe in retaliation for Nato deployments in the West next Marshal Ustinov also de-clared that Russia wished to live in peace with all countries and did not thrust its social system on anyone. The Prime Ministers of sign that, well before the end of Britain and the Irish Republic and their senior colleagues celebrated yesterday the full restoration of good working relations between their two governments, after the coolness produced by the Falklands crisis, with five hours of talks at Chequers.

Dr Garret FitzGerald, who had an hour's tête-à-tête with Mrs Margaret Thatcher, spent some time dilating on his hopes that a new way forward in Northern Ireland may be found in the discussions of the New Ireland Forum of nationalist parties. But neither side gave the least indication as to whether Mrs Thatcher allowed herself to share his hopes.

"It was an exposition by me rather than an active discussion between us," Dr FitzGerald told journalists afterwards. He would not say if Mrs Thatcher agreed with his views, or was sympathetic, but said simply that he thought she was "very interested".

British sources equally reticent said that Dr FitzGerald had spent much of his time explaining his concern that the political stalemate in the North was increasing the alienation of the minority community, but that Mrs Thatcher's main contribution had been to listen.

Dr FitzGerald's chief objective yesterday was modest that dialogue between the two sides at the highest level should be re-

Recovery could falter, says CBI

From Edward Townsend

Industrialists yesterday gave Mrs Thatcher and her Cabinet one of the firmest warnings for years that without some urgent stimulus to economic growth they would be unable to maintain the country's recovery from recession. The annual conference of the Confederation of British Indus-try opened in Glasgow with clear calls for a renewed government commitment to oring down interest rates and to formulate more flexible poli-cies to ensure sustained growth. The CBI has already urged the Chancellor, Mr Nigel Lawson, to abolish the National Insurance Surcharge in his forthcoming autumn statement. In its proposals for next spring's budget it is expected to call for a £1,000m to £2,000m reflation of the economy.

Despite fears that the de-letion from the conference agenda of resolutions critical of the Government would take the steam out of the debates, many delegates expressed concern at the alleged failure of Mrs Thatcher's ministers to act to reduce business costs further and to combat the import

Almost to a man, the CBI members rallied around their director-general, Sir Terence Beckett, who made one of his most robust speeches for some time. He warned of the consequences of not speeding up the growth of the economy, and questioned ministers' pre-occupation with the public sector borrowing requirement. But he offered industry's support for the Government's overall strategy.

The economy was improving, he said, "but we are not exactly ecstatic": 85 per cent of companies were still short of orders.

With inflation coming down, industrialists were surprised interest rates had not also been reduced. Rates should be "decoupled" from those in the United States. The discussion on the UK economy attracted more than usual interest at the conference after the decision of CBI leaders to omit what they considered an extreme resolution from the West Wales committee which said it was "appalled" at government inaction.

Mr Michael Hearn, a member of the committee said: "I and my colleagues are not extremists. We are ordinary businessmen and we wanted to put a strong message to the government. While the politicians debate, much of British industry is bleeding to death."

The chosen resolution, call-ing for more flexible government policies, was carried overwhelmingly, despite criticism from Sir Peter Shepherd, of the Shepherd Building Group, who saw it as "wet". Leading article, page 15

NCCL aims to broaden its image

By Richard Dowden Mr Larry Gostin (right), the new general secretary of the National Council for Civil Liberties, said yesterday that he would aim at broadening the image of the organization and "gain a wide and substantial following from all parties, classes and races."

He said it was "a great tragedy" that the council had been seen as associated with one particular group. The two previous general secretaries, Ms Patricia Hewitt and Ms Harriet Harman, left to work for the Labour Party. Ms Harman is a Labour MP.

He said the organization had an unfair image as being anti-police or unduly sympathetic to the criminal. "Defence of the rights of those accused of crime or terrorism should never be construed as support for those activities."

North Ronaldsay, a crofting community in Orkney, was linked to the national grid yesterday at a cost of nearly film. The island has 100 inhabitants.

But Mr Gostin said the tenor of the times was becoming increasingly anti-libertarian and cited the Police and Criminal Evidence Bill, issunigration legislation and the Prevention of Terrorism Act as examples.

Mr Bettaney, aged 33, who faced a total of six new charges, is also accused of disclosing details about the expulsion of three Soviet diplomats from Britain earlier this year and of collecting information "calcu-lated to be useful to an enemy".

The additional charges were made after Mr Bettanev had appeared at Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, London, on one charge under section 7 of the Official Secrets Act. It alleged that on several dates between January and September, this year, be did "certain acts preparatory to communicating to another person for a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interest of the state information calculated to be useful to the enemy".

The new charges, put to him while he was in the cells with his solicitor, Mr Miles Laddie, and Det Supt John Westcott, of the Special Branch, accused him of collecting information calculated to be useful to an enemy Act.

He was also accused of communicating "on or about June 12, 1983, to another person information which was calculated to be, which might be, or which was intended to be, useful to an enemy, namely an official assessment of Russian intelligence services operating in the Unted Kingdom".

Another charge, similarly worded, said that on or about April 3 he had communicated information concerning the expulsion of three Soviet citizens from Britain. He now faces two further charges of carrying out acts preparatory to communicating the "precise arrangements for the communication of classified information" on or about April 3 and June 12.

Mr Bettaney, of Victoria Road, Coulsdon, Surrey, was also accused of preparing to "press for a response to his proposals of April 3 and June 12".

Three of the charges were brought under section 1 of the Official Secrets Act, 1911, and four under section 7 of the 1920

Mr Bettaney, who worked for British intelligence for seven years, wore a blue pinstripe suit at court yesterday and was remanded in custody for a week by the magistrate, Mr Kenneth Hamington.

Mr Laddie told the court that his client was happy to be dealt with in his absence for formal weekly remand until his next personal appearance on December 5, when committal proceed-ings are likely.

Mr Battaney was first charged on September 19 when Det Supt Westcott, head of the European section of the Special Branch and the man responsible for his arrest, said that more serious charges would follow. MI5 is responsible for intelli-

Under the present Govern-

priority targets. A spokeswoman for the inspectorate would not comment yesterday on the attitudes of staff to the reductions. She said: "We have to deploy our resources according to priorities, and clearly a fireworks factory demands more attention then does a small clothing firm. "It is anyone's guess how many unregistered firms of that kind there are. We have to rely on hearsay or an inspector finding such premises almost by accident, or indeed a tragedy, to People trying to escape the ownsend Thoresen ferry, European Gateway, as it sank of Harwich last year with the loss of six lives were unable to use one of the liferafts, a public inquiry into the tragedy was told in London yesterday.

Mr John Reeder, counsel for the Department of Transport, told the inquiry that within 10 minutes of being in collision with the Sealink ferry, Speed-link Vanguard, the European Gateway was lying with its starboard side on the scabed. He added: "Men were hampered in getting into the liferaft by reason of the ladder falling short as the European Gateway heeled over to starboard.

"This caused the liferaft to be upturned because a painter (rope) was attached, and in the darkness people could not locate the knife to cut it." That resulted in men being

"spilled into the water" and explained how at least two of the men died, Mr Redder said. "Water was seen pouring across the auxiliary engine room and then through the watertight door into the main engine room, appearing as a

This was a wide-ranging measure raising issues of vital concern in a question that the Government had considered the bill could seriously question that the Government had considered the seriously question that the Government had considered the seriously question that the government had considered the seriously and the constant of the constant free society. It was needed for three reasons. Each provided a strong case in itself, but taken together the case

Parts of the Bill made it a legal requirement that senior officers should authorize certain decisions. That had not been a requirement in the past, such as the setting up of a road block. It was also a legal requirement that such decisions would be properly recorded, and there had been no legal requirement for that in the nast.

These were legal changes, but changes that would buttress initiatives for better management of the police. Clear powers and better safeguards were crucial in seaning more effective policing. The balance

It was in the public and the police interest to ensure that investigations into complaints were fully and fairly carried out and were seen to be so carried out. The first change was in the finition of "serious arrestable definition of "serious arrestable offence". His aim was to introduce as much objectivity and certainty into the definition as possible and also to take account of the widely varying circumstances of different crimes. It was based on the approach suggested by the Law Society. Certain offences, such as murder and rape, would always be serious arrestable offences. Other offences might fall into the category if they met specific tests. Offences

There was one change in the Bill which had not yet been made but which he intended to bring forward. The Bill gave suspects in police custody the statutory right to consult solicitors privately. But to make the right effective arrangements were needed for solicitors to be available at all times when legal advise which he consult. To assist the legal profession the Government planned to strengthen the Law Society's existing powers to make duty solicitors schemes with the aim of ensuring that sufficient solicitors took part in the schemes.

A new clause to this effect would be proposed in committee.

The Government recognized that strengthening the suspect's rights in this way would place an extra demand on resources and it had made provision for this.

Uppermost in the Government's mind had been the concept of balance which had been such an important feature of discussion of the Bill. Alongside each power which the Bill gave to the police was a corresponding obligation designed ensure the power was exercised fairly and only in the expressionation for which it was designed Where there had been legitimate prehensions about the possible fects of the Bill the Government

Mr Gerald Kanfman, chief Opposition spokesman on home affairs, said the manner in which Mr Brittan presented the Bill was curious. Apprehended in the felonious act of trying to slip a bogus police and criminal evidence Bill through Parliament, the accused man, Brittan, tried to avoid the charge by grassing on his ac-complice, the old lag Whitelaw.

What the House had to ask was not whether the Brittan Bill gave better effect to this or that than did the Whitelaw Bill, but what it would think of the new version if there had never been a earlier Bill.

The latest version of the Government's notions on dealing with complaints against the police was once again unsatisfactory, both to the public and to the police. It still lacked the independent element in the investigation of complaints that was recommended by Lord by the sheer complexity of the machinery proposed.

The main criticism of the Bill must be levelled against the substantial parts of it which dealt with the treatment of people who become enmeshed in the detention procedures which might be triggered off by the clause giving powers to constables on reasonable suspicion to search people and vehicles for stolen or prohibited articles.

The clause introduced for the first time nation-wide powers of stop and

What the Bill contained was in many respects very different from what the royal commission and Lord Scayman recommended.

COAL INDUSTRY

The present dispute in the coal industry could do nothing but harm for the prospects of the industry's return to viability, Mr Giles Shaw, Under Secretary of State for Energy, said in the Commons where he stated during question time that between November 1, 1982, and October 31, 1983, a total of 13 pits had closed, four pairs of pits had merged and one new pit had opened.

On pit closures, Mr John Home Robertson (East Lothian, Lab) who asked if Monkton Hall colliery was next on the hit list, said the miners there had gone back to work today (Monday) on the understanding that the National Coal Board is committed to the future of that colliery. How on earth can the high potential of that pit be fulfilled if the NCB fails to restart the essential NCB fails to restart the essential Mr Shaw: The House will welcome the fact that the men have returned to work and I certainly hope this will result in a productive operation being continued by the NCB in Scotland who have made a massive investment on the understanding that productivity and efficiency levels will be comparable with those that can be achieved. I certainly hope the miners also realize that.

Whether the "Downing

Sir Douglas, who knows better than anyone whose ears must be bent if change is to be achieved in Whitehall, would not divulge last week the reforms his will lectures though he had no illusions about their chances of success even if the Cabinet are among his 100,000 enstomers.

French Socialists take a beating in Paris municipal elections

France's governing alliance has had two more electoral setbacks. Both, worringly for the Socialists, are in the formerly rock-solid "red belt" of municipalities that ring Paris. At Villeneuve-St-Georges, a town of 35,000 people south of Paris, the united opposition parties took 50.4 per cent of the yesterday. This means they have won on the first round. At Aulnay-sous-Bois, which has a population of 80,000 and lies to the north of the city, no party won a clear majority. That means the two front runners must fight it out again on Sunday week.

But the united opposition, with 45.13 per cent is in a strong position since the united left took only 40.35 per cent. Furthermore, the National Front, with 9.32 per cent of the posses is likely to throw its votes, is likely to throw its weight behind the right virtually ensuring victory.

The Council of State called for new elections in the two the Front at the parliamentary towns after finding evidence of level even if local candidates fraud during the municipal decide to join forces.

South Lebanon blockade lifted after 72 hours

The Israeli military blockade of occupied southern Lebanon which had effectively par-titioned the country for 72 hours was lifted late yesterday afternoon, to allow pedestrians and a limited number of Arab vehicles to cross the two bridges spanning the Awali River.

Despite the concilliatory move, tension remained high after reports of a general mobilization of reservists in Syria, Israeli forces were understood to have been placed on alert following news of the call-up monitored from Damascus

Israeli sources have been en to play down speculation that Israel might cooperate with the United States in any retaliation for the recent suicide bombines in Lebanon, but further unilateral Israeli attacks following the Tyre blast have not been ruled out.

At one of the 19 funerals held in Israel on Sunday, Dr Joseph Burg, the Interior Minister, said that the attack by Israeli aircraft on Palestinian positions in Lebanon last Friday was intended to remind the Syrians that they could not attack Israeli citizens with impunity.

Both Awali bredges had been shut in reaction to the suicide attack in Tyre, which demolished Israel's military headquarters and killed 60 people. Since then, there has been strong political pressure on the Government to make the xlosure permanent, but Mr Yitzhak Shamir, the Prime Minister, has indicated his

The blockade, enforced by the construction of concrete barriers, and accompanied by a threat to shoot any Lebanese civilians who attempted to breach it, had infuriated the majority Shia Muslim population in the Israeli-occupied south. Leaders of the estimated 600,000 Shia Muslims living under Israeli domination had threatend a general strike in protest against it later today. Israeli military sources told The Times that a wish to prevent the strike had played an important part in the decision to reopen the bridges. ### SHARING A BETTER QUALITY OF LIFE

South Africa is involved in a remarkable process of providing fair opportunities for all its population groups. The South African Government is committed to ensure that each of South Africa's many nationalities have the ability and resources to realize their social, economic and political aspirations.

Housing is a leading example of South Africa's development process. And as an integrated part of its drive towards home ownership for everyone, the South African Government has given the goahead for the sale of 500 000 Statefinanced homes at discounts of up to 40% of their market value.

MEETING THE HOUSING CHALLENGE

South Africa's urban Black population is expected to rise from 9 million currently to around 20 million by the turn of the century. It is estimated that an additional 4.9 million housing units will have to be provided to accommodate this phenomenal urbanisation.

The housing challenge is being met by both the Government and the private sector. Government initiatives are directed mainly towards providing the infrastructure and support for self-help building projects, while private enterprise provides loans, subsidies and guarantees.

THE FUTURE - BETTER PROSPECTS FOR ALL

A recent survey indicated that 82 % of all employers were prepared to provide their Black staff with assistance to buy their own homes.

If the generals dislike Mr Ozal so much why did they allow him to run, while vetoing so many others? The most likely answer is that they thought, until the last minute, that he would be too unpopular to constitute a serious political threat. A right-wing death squad last week threatened the lives of Mgr Rosa Chavez and El Salvador's leading Roman Catholic authority, Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Damas.

The threats are not being taken lightly. Eight Catholic churchmen and women have been murdered since 1980, including three American nuns and, most notoriously, in March, 1980, Archbiship Oscar Romero who was shot by a right-wing hitman. In the four years of El Salvador's civil war, an average of 200 people have been killed a month by death squads.

In his homily on Sunday, Mgr Rosa Chavez was pointedly ambiguous about the armed forces' role. But CIA evidence released last week by the American Embassy here, re-vealed that military officers take part in assassinations, Mgr Rosa Chávez said clandestine groups wished to impose totalitarianism of the right in the country. Last Thursday the bishop's father was arrested by the National Police and only released after pressure from the President and Defence Minister.

Negligence in Hongkong style completion Before Lord Diplock, Lord Elwyn-Jones, Lord Roskill, Lord Brandon of Oakbrook and Lord Brightman

[Judgment delivered November 7]
A firm of solicitors in Hongkong who knowing that the property was mortgaged to a bank nevertheless mortgaged to a bank nevertheless followed a generally accepted practice known as "completion Hongkong style" and forwarded the whole of the purchase money advanced by the client, the prospective mortgages of the purchaser, in exchange not for the executed documents of title but for an undertaking by the vendor's solicitor to forward them within a soccified period, were held to be solicitor to forward them within a specified period, were held to be negligent since that practice involved a foreseeable risk which could have been avoided. Accordingly the solicitors were liable in damages to their client because the vendors' solicitor absconded with the money and the bank refused to execute a reassignment, and so their client failed to obtain the agreed security for the advance to the

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council allowed an appeal by the appellants, Edward Wong Finance Co Ltd, from a decision of the Court of Appeal of Hongkong (Sir Denys Roberts, Chief Justice, 1984 Mr. Justice, 1984 Mr. Justice, 1984 Mr. Justice, 1984 Mr. Justice, 1985 Mr. Justic and Mr Justice Silke with Mr Justice, and Mr Justice Silke with Mr Justice of Appeal Li dissenting) made on June 4, 1981, who allowed an appeal by the respondent firm of solicitors, Johnson Stokes & Master, from the judgment of Mr Justice Penlington, who had ordered these who had ordered them to pay HK$1,295,000 and interest to the

Mr Peter J Millett, QC. and Miss Marion Simmons for the appellants; Mr Leolin Price, QC. and Mr Richard Mills-Owens, QC, (of the Hongkong Bar) for the respondent solicitors.

LORD BRIGHTMAN said that the appeal was concerned with the standard of care owed by a solicitor to his client, an intending mortgages of property, under the conveyancing practice prevalent in Hongkong.
The subject matter was the ground floor of a factory building. The building was owned by Ho Sauki subject to a mortgage to the Hang Seng Bank.

By an agreement dated December 17, 1975, Ho Sau-ki agreed to sell, the building to Lucky Time Finance Co Ltd free from the mortgage. On the same day Lucky Time agreed to sub-sell to Mr Chan and Kai Ming Investment Co Ltd. The sub-rus Investment Co Ltd. The sub-pur-hasers agreed between themselves to appropriate the ground to Mr Po Fung Finishing Works Ltd was the tenant of part of the ground floor and an associated company was the tenant of the remainder. Mr Chan approached Mr Shum, Managing Director of Po Fung and its associated company, and offered to sell the ground floor of the building for $1,850,000, and on December 30

December 30 agreement was reached. Mr Shum approached Mr Wong, the managing director of the appellants, for finance. He agreed that his company would lend $1,355,000 against a mortgage of the property and the personal guarantees of Mr Shum and his co-directors. The rest was to be found from other sources. On January 21, 1976, the appellants instructed the respondents, a long-established and highly respected firm of Hongkong solicitors, to act for them in the m transaction. The firm entrusted the work to Miss Leung, a member of their staff who had qualified as a solicitor in 1970 and had joined the

The respondents initiated a land The respondents initiated a land search against the property and that revealed charges in favour of the Hang Seng Bank to secure banking facilities up to $4,400,000 and interest. They wrote to Mr Danny Yiu, the solicitor acting for the vendor, informing him that they had instructions to prepare a mortage over the property in time. mortgage over the property in time for completion on January 26.

The tight time-table envisaged for the completion of the purchase and mortgage was not exceptional in Hongkong Mr Danny Yiu was a one-man firm and nothing was known against his integrity.

On January 27 the respondents wrote to Mr Danny Yiu stating that they would ask their clients to put them in funds with the mortgage proceeds of $1.355,000 towards payment of the purchase price of the premises upon receipt of his undertaking that he would within 10 days upon receipt from them of their cheque for that amount send them, inter alia, a duly executed assignment to Bovill (Mr Shum's shelf company which was in fact purchasing the property) and an attested copy of the cancellation of the sub-purchase agreement; and that he would arrange for the reassignment of the premises from the Hang Seng Bank to Ho Sau-ki to be registered. Mr Danny Yiu gave the undertakings. The appellants handed to the respondents banker's drafts in favour of Mr Danny Yiu totalling $1,665,000, the additional $310,000 with which the proceedings were not concerned being the result. of a private arrangement between Mr Wone and Mr Shum. The respondents delivered the cheques to Mr worthless. in 1976 the appellants issued procedings against Bovill and the guarantors for repayment of the money advanced and interest. A year-later the appellants added the respondents as defendants claiming that they had failed to exercise due care, skill and judgment in the performance of their duty to take the necessary steps to protect the appellants' interests.

The alleged shortcomings of the respondents could be summarised as a failure to secure that the appellants money would be applied only to the release of the property from the incumbrances in favour of the bank, and subject thereto in payment of any purchase money to

The normal method of completing a contract for the sale of land in England was for the purchaser's solicitor to deliver to the vendor's solicitor a draft for the balance of the purchase money in exchange for an executed grant of the land or interest in land contracted to be sold. If the property was subject to a mortgage the mortgage would either be a party to the grant and receive the whole or part of the purchase money by way of redemption, or he would execute a separate release of his charge in return for the redemption money.

if the property purchased was to be financed by a new mortgage the loan would be made against delivery of the executed grant and instru-ment of charge. The payment of money and perfection of title were simultaneous transactions. In the instant case that simple and fraud-proof procedure was not followed. The defence of the respondents was that it was the normal and customary conveyancing practice in Hongkong for the purchase money to be handed to the vendor's solicitor in reliance upon under-takings such as were given by Mr Danny Yiu, and that they were entitled to consider that the appellants' interests were adequately protected by such under-takings.

There was compelling evidence both from the appellants' expert witness, who was then the President of the Law Society of Hongkong and from the senior partner of the respondents, of the existence and merits of that practice, and there were findings of fact by the trial judge and the Court of Appeal to the

In the Court of Appeal Sir Denys Roberts said that virtually every conveyance and mortgage com-pleted in Hongkong within living memory had been effected by what had become known as the Hongkong style of completion.

The trial judge nevertheless came to the conclusion that the respondents were liable in negligence. The majority of the Court of Appeal took a different view.

The prevalence of the practice was established and it was peculiarly well adapted to the conditions in Hongkong. It had obvious advan-tages to both solicitors and their clicuts. Their Lordships intended to say nothing to discourage

However, in assessing whether the respondents fell short of the standard of care which they owed towards the appellants, three questions had to be considered. First, did the practice, as operated by the respondents in the instant case, involve a foreseeable risk? If so, could that risk have been avoided? If so, were the respondents negligent if failing to take avoiding the risk of loss to the appellants by placing the money at the disposition of the vendors' solicitor unquestio-nably involved a foreseeable risk, ly the risk of an embezzle by the recipient. Such a risk was usually remote, but was none the less foreseeable.

The foreseeability of the risk was proved by the fact that it had been foreseen by the profession. In 1959 a subcommittee was appointed by the Law Society of Hongkong to consider, and if thought fit, make recommendations on matters in-cluding whether any and what changes should be made in the conveyancing practice prevailing in 1965 and it was plain from the report that some solicitors foresaw the risk of a Hongkong style of completion miscarrying. The prac-tice depended upon trust and was one of convenience and courtesy as between the solicitors on each side

According to the report it would not be unethical for a solicitor to insist on English style of completion notwithstanding the possible impli-cation that the solicitor so requesting was not trusting his colleague. The recommendations of on the basis that the risk inherent in the Hongkong style of completion (in the absence of precautions to guard against embezziement) was

Disqualifying drivers

Hughes v Challes Before Lord Justice Watkins and Mr Justice McCullough

[Judgment delivered November 4] The decision to disqualify a defendant pending his taking a driving test pursuant to section 93(7) of the Road Traffic Act 1972 depended on the criterion of his competence to drive and not on the Safety of his driving.

The Queen's Bench Divisional Court so held in allowing an appeal by Alan Hughes against the decision of Judge Braithwaite at Bristol Crown Court on March 25, 1983 who dismissed the defendant's appeal against his disqualification for driving until he had passed a test of competence to drive pursuant to section 2 of the 1972 Act.

Mr Christopher Sharp for the defendant; Mr Colin Sara for the prosecutor.

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS said that the defendant had been riding a motorcycle at 80 mph along a road subject to a 30 mph restriction. At of state would be notified of the the time he was suffering from an episode of hypomania due to a manic-depressive psychosis. The effect of that was to make him elated, impulsive and overconfi-

It was accepted by the pros-ecution in the crown court that the episode was genuine. A psy-chiatrist's report indicated that there was no evidence of psychiatric illness although incidents of hypomania might recur.

The crown court found that under normal circumstances the defendant was not incompetent to drive, but took the view that section 93(7) of the 1972 Act was designed to ens that only safe drivers drove on the roads. That was clearly a misconstruction of that section.

In R v Donnelly ([1975] RTR 243, 245) it was said: "The object of the enactment of section 93 (7) of the Road Traffic Act 1972 is to test drivers who may have become disqualified and who may for some reason show some lack of comrelating to their driving should be further tested". The crown court had adopted too wide a construction of the section, which amounted to an error of law.

The order for disqualification would be quashed, but the secretary circumstances pursuant to section 92 of the 1972 Act, which relates to iscase or cisability. Mr Justice McCullough delivered

For example all that was needed in such a case was that the purchaser's or lender's solicitor should take reasonable steps to satisfy himself that the vendor's or borrower's solicitor had authority from his client to receive the purchase money or loan; and, in the case of property already subject to a mortgage which was to be dis-charged, so much of the purchase price or loan as was needed to discharge the prior mortgage could be paid by cheque or draft in favour of the mortgages or his duly authorized agent, and not by a draft in favour of the vendor's solicitor.

Simple precautions such as those would ensure that the purchaser or lender was placed by his solicitor in the favourable position which he ought to occupy when he parted with his money, that was to say he would have an unanswerable claim against the other side for specific parformance of that party's obli-gation to execute the appropriate

Simple steps such as those would not undermine the basic principles of the Hongkong style of completion because they were those advocated by the Law Society itself in a circular to members dated Novemb-The risk inherent in the

Hongkong style of completion as operated in the instant case being foreseeable, and readily avoidable, the respondents were negligent in not foreseeing and avoiding that

Their Lordships did not attach blame to Miss Leung for the calamity that occurred, in entrust-ing Mr Danny Yiu with the whole of the money she was merely following the normal practice of her firm, and she had never been instructed to act Regina v Dobbs otherwise in such a case or to take Regina v Hitchings

Their Lordships had been referred to the agreement for the sale of the factory building by Ho Sau-ki to Lucky Time as a representative example of the standard form of agreement for the sale of land prevalent in Hongkong. After providing for the sale of the property free from encumbrances there was a clause which meant that there was to be a simultaneous payment of the purchase money by the purchaser and delivery of the executed assignment by the vendor, and (if there was a mortgage outstanding) simultaneous or prior release of that encumbrance to enable the assignment to take place free from encumbrances.

In such a case the Hongkong style of completion would involve a departure from the agreement as signed by vendor and purchaser, and a departure which would not necessarily be to the advantage of the purchaser although often to the advantage of the vendor. The question therefore arose whether the purchaser's solicitor was, strictly speaking, justified in departing from the contract by permitting a Hongkong style completion without seeking the authority of his client, and if he did so depart without authority, whether he might expose himself to hability in the event of the completion miscarrying, whatever precautions he might have taken. The solution to that problem might be found in an adjustment to the standard form of contract for sale. Their Lordships recommended that the appeal should be allowed. The order of the Supreme Court would be restored so far as the payment of damages, interest and costs by the respondents was concerned. The respondents would pay the costs of the appellants in the Court of Appeal and before the Board.

The present impossibility of ordering suspension often presented ordering suspension often the court with a dilemma.

His Lordship was delivering judgment allowing appeals by Anthony Thomas Dobbs, aged 18, and Andrew Paul Hirchings, aged 19, both of Ross-on-Wye, against sentences of 12 months' youth custody imposed in Hereford Crown Court by Mr Recorder Curtis QC on pleas of guilty to inflicting grievous bodily harm on a man who was taking his dog for a walk. On appeal the sentences were reduced to six months' youth custody.

Lord Elystan-Morgan, assigned

Lord Elystan-Morgan, assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals, for Dobbs; Mr P. M. Thomas, assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals, for Hitchings. The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, delivering the judgment of the court, said that the man taking his dog for a walk just before midnight, saw two youths hiding in some school grounds. A third youth approached and punched the man in the face He could expensive in the face. He could remember nothing after that until he woke up in hospital. The appellant Dobbs admitted kicking the man while he was on the ground and punching him. Hitch-ings, who had a "punch fracture" of the hand, admitted kicking and punching the victim. One of the more distressing parts of the case, from the appellants point of view, was that Dobbs had enjoyed the highest reputation, had never been in trouble of any sort with the police, was highly spoken of, came from a caring family and oard.

Solicitors: Linklaters & Paines: had excellent references.
One asked oneself what caused

The appellant Hitchings was in

The question was: how did one deal with such thuggery?

First, it had to be made perfectly clear that young men who elected to behave in such a manner would be going to lose their liberty straight away. The problem was the length of time which the court should impose by way of custodial sentence in such circumstances.
Their Lordships noted that,

Regina v Muir

[Judgment delivered November 7] The evidence of a district manager, who when cross-examined gave evidence of a fact he had obtained from head office, but who

such a young man to behave in such a barbaric fashion. The answer, in part at any rate, was drink. Undoubtedly each appellant had had far too much to drink.

The appellant Highing was in the custody was appropriate because society had to mark its strong disapproval of young bullies who went around and beat up inoffensive drive for a walk.

The appellant Highings was in the custody was appropriate because served on passing a partly suspended sentence—six months.

Each of those two was going to be wrong for one reason or another. That was the situation which faced dogs for a walk.

On the other hand, one would like, having made the point, to allow the young man his liberty after a certain length of sentence had been served. For instance, in the present case it might well have been that the recorder would have made up his mind that the appropriate term was 12 or even 18 months but, in the light of the character, testimonials and so on, perhaps only six months of that term needed to be served— but that is could not do but that he could not do. Their Lordships noted that, unfortunately, it was not possible for terms of youth custody to be suspended either in whole or in part. Consequently the sentencing court was often in a dilemma Doubtless from the point of view of the public and of the victim, a comparatively lengthy term of the court. One hoped that Parliament would see fit to make it possible before not too long for the courts to do that which in many cases they would properly wish to do.

However, at the moment, that was not possible. So what had to be done? Plainly the only proper course in the circumstances was to see the in the circumstances was to pass the lesser of the two sentences, making it clear at the same time for the benefit of the long-suffering public that, if it had been possible to pass a sentence of 18 months past of sentence of 18 months, part of which would be suspended, that is what would have happened.

Applying the principles which their Lordships had endeavoured to set out, they had concluded that the

The progress of jet from mourning dress to midnight glamour is a social comment on changing times. And the intri-cacies of the Victorian mournetiquette were also social reflections of their times.

By the Victorian era, the rules had become complicated and a social pitfall for the unwary", writes Lou Taylor in her fascinating new book about mourning dress. Mrs Taylor, a sprior lecture in the Amend senior lecturer in the Art and Design History Department at the Brighton Polytechnic, charts the development of mourning dress from court ritual to public obsession, taking the death in childbirth of Princess Charlotte in 1817 as a significant moment general awareness. Queen Victoria's long widowhood was an important factor in the spread of sartorial rituals. By 1881, Sylvia's Home Journal was publishing a list of more 20 items of clothing needed by a widow for "correct and respectable first mourning". This included 12 handkerchiefs with black borders and "a summer parasol of silk, deeply trimmed with crape, almost covered with no lace or fringe for the first year". The second stage of mourning (less crape and fancier fabrics and trimmings) started after a year and a day, with further precise changes until the entire 2½ year period was concluded.

The inequality of the sexes was pointed up in mourning rites. Widowers were obliged only to wear an armband once funeral was over. But women were fossilized in widow's weeds long after the husband's death. (Queen Victoria never came out of mourning.) "Women were used as a showners to display their as a showpiece to display their family's total respectability. sense of conformity and wealth", says Lou Taylor, "Mourning dress was the most perfect vehicle for this pur-

Jet jewelry and the rather pretty black and white enamel mourning jewelry carried status and were fashionable. The social prestige attached to giving away mourning rings at a funeral, or wearing specially designed pearl and diamond mourning jewelry, had nothing to do with memories of the dead. They were signals of wealth and status among the living. When mourning jewelry was popularized, mass-produced and therefore slipped down the of using jet in its unpolished state for "first" mourning also derived from pre-Christian superstitions concerning refashionable, flourishing among

A preoccupation with death was replaced by an obsession with sex, and jet with its connotations of mourning was consigned to fashion oblivion. Its revival is the result of fashion's current enthusiasm for all things black and beautiful. The Victorian matron must be turning in her elaborately carved grave to see her symbol of respectability adorning the cleavage of a modern party dress.

n the 1960s there was a science fiction series on television called The Outer Limits. At the start of each programme the picture would disappear, to be replaced by the signs of electrical interference. A voice heavy with threat and authority would urge the viewer not to try to adjust the set since "we have taken

next twenty years

In the next two decades "they" will take control of your television set and use it in ways which, even now, are to most people almost unimaginable. The numble set in the corner of the living room is becoming the focus of a vast range of new purposes and functions that will profoundly affect leisure and

A year or so ago, the president and chief executive of Time Inc, an organization which has been a major. force in the growth of cable TV in the United States, offered a vision of TV in the year 2001 which did not only encompass the idea of wider choice, but suggested that the viewer may recome the ultimate definer of what he or she will see.

In the magazine Broadcasting, he said: "You may one day view a movie no one else will ever see because you ourself directed it along the lines that appealed especially to you. That includes not just compressing or expanding sequences, but choosing them according to your taste. You could have 100 hours of film, stills and graphics from which to put together your own 40-minute or two-hour show. Or your home computer, containing profiles of members of your family, would automatically pick certain elements and eliminate others, depending upon which family member was watching."

He added that Time was developing what it calls demand electronic in terms of where the signals fall and publishing, "enabling the home viewer-reader to create his or her own magazine, to pick and choose from a sea of information photos, maps and effect of this is that the size of the dish graphics so that some stories can be needed to receive DBS signals will be or eliminated".

An even more visionary view of telecommunications in the year 2001 is offered by Dr Arthur Harkins of the University of Minnesota. He believes that as microelectronics and telecommunications become more advanced. cheaper, and smaller, they will be implanted in the human body and even begin to replace parts of it. Man will become what Harkins calls homo sapiens ethnotronicus, a hybrid of flesh, blood and information-processing silicon, "a symbionic blend of culture-bearing person and culturecearing machine".

He envisages wristwatch-size devices which calculate, compute, measure body functions, talk, listen, forecast, take dictation, store and undate every second all the information in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, act as a videophone and provide all kinds of aids to information.

Homes will themselves become "smart", monitoring everything that is happening within them and, where necessary, communicating with their owner. Cities will also become "smart", sceing, understanding and regulating everything that happens within their boundaries, from traffic accidents, to crime, to pollution, to voting. And so it goes on, extraordinary developments which begin with and will be centred on what we now see as the little box in the corner of the room, the telly.

In the year 2001, even if you are not walking around like an android, you will have long since ceased to regard the TV as just a machine through which a limited number of entertainment and information channels are received. You will instead possess a home communication system (HCS) as a central feature of your home and a number of portable TV sets for use in other rooms.

Into your HCS will come signals from video cassette recorders and videodisc machines, both of which will be as ubiquitous as transistor radios

General Galtieri writer. My friend, this question betrays a certain ignorance of Latin American politics. Sometimes we Latin American positives. Sometimes we have a civilian government, sometimes military, but we do not mix the two. In this election, there was no place for soldiers. Beside, a serving officer does not offer himself for election, which is a good thing; it is very humiliating to knock on a door and say, "I am General Gattieri, I wonder if you have considered voting for the United Generals Party, that is a remarkably pretty baby, yes I too am very worried United Generals Party, may as a remarkably pretty baby, year 1 soo an very worried about the suburban bus service". Were you surprised that the British did not back the Americans as the USA backed as at the time of the Falklands War? How does this effect the special relationship? -H.C. of Edinburgh. General Galtieri writes: it is a strange phrase, this special relationship, in my country it means something else. When we see two men walking in the street hand in hand, we say: "Ah, they are having a special relationship". Then we bang them on the head till they are normal. So when I hear that Britain and the USA have this special relationship, I laugh and think of your two countries having terrible rows and slapping each other's wrists. You see, I have a sense of humour too.

His speeches translate very well into Spanish, much eloo ience and orator saving much the same things about Mrs Thatcher as I always did. Well, we shall see if he can do what I failed to do. (General Galtieri will be back soon to How a broadcasting guide might bill a night's viewing in the year 2001. British homes will be bombarded with a huge choice of television signals are today: from terrestrial transmitters concern over a growing traffic jam in the latest 58-channel CATV (cable (some covering whole regions, others serving localities within a 15-mile radius) from optical fibre cable, from communications satellites serving local cable systems or master antennae on blocks of flats, and particularly from satellite signals beamed directly into Direct broadcast satellites (DBS), which will be the most important source of TV programmes by 2001, is a natural development from the communications satellites which have already transformed worldwide telecommunications. DBS will have vastly greater power, be more highly focused therefore have a potential signal strength 1,000 times greater than that of communications satellites. The net considerably sma quired for communications satellites.

Satellites will be the cheapest way to deliver TV signals

The immediate problem faced by anyone who would wish to receive satellite signals in the home is not just the cost, size and efficiency of the dish. They are also faced with the difficulty of how to pick up signals from different satellites parked in different orbital slots. By the year 2001, this will be solved by what are known as planar or waveguide antennae. A one-metre parabolic dish will be replaced by a flat planar 3ft square which will be electronically steered from satellite to satellite across a wide area without physically moving, guided according to instructions programmed into a home computer. How many channels will a home communications system be able to receive from DBS? An American corporation, Comsat, estimates that by 2001 there will be room for 110 to 152 satellite-delivered channels for each American time zone. John Howkins, a British expert, estimates that there could be 175 channels utilizing the 12 gigahertz (12m kilohertz) range.

Every European country, example, was awarded five channels in this range for DBS transmission. And that is only for starters. By the late 1990s, a whole new part of the direct broadcast spectrum will have been opened up in the 22.5 to 23 ghz range which could provide another 150 to 300 channels. 2001 may also see the advent of laser-driven, light-wave satellite communications with footprints, the area covered by the beam, no larger that a city block. An indication of what is in store emerged recently when it was announced in New York that, despite earth-orbit, it has now become possible to allocate more than 1,800 TV channels for direct broadcast to nations in the western hemisphere without having to worry about serious interference among them.

without having to worry about serious interference among them. By 2001, satellites will have established themselves as the cheapest, most efficient, most easily maintained way of delivering signals to homes. The HCS will in all probability also be connected to a high capacity, broadband cable system. All cable by 2001 will consist of optic fibre, a micro-thin tube of glass or even plastic fibres no thicker than a human hair, which is able to transmit light signals with little or no distortion by using the principal of total internal reflection.

Signals are converted into a series of extremely rapid pulses of light by tiny, solid state lasers or light-emitting dishes that can "pulse" at a rate of 550 million times per second. This allows enormous amounts of pieces of information to be transmitted which are then picked up at the far end of the fibre, reconverted into an electrical signal for the benefit of a standard receiver to appear as displays of information or TV programmes.

The most exciting aspect of opticfibre cable systems will be their enormous "bandwidth": the greater the bandwidth, the more information they can carry at any one moment. For example, a telephone signal is not especially complex and only requires a narrow bandwidth. A TV picture, which is far more complex, requires a much wider bandwith and hence cable with a greater capacity.

possible, ponder this fact. In a paper prepared in 1981 Professor John Ward the Massachusetts Institute of which "fibre optic cable lengths of half a mile have been operated in digital mode with an effective bandwidth of 200,000 megahertz; 500 times that of television) systems". For various technical reasons the 58 channels would equate to 30 in Britain, creating the possibility of fibre cable systems with a 15,000 TV channel capacity.

The principal advantage of cable nations in the western hemisphere communications will not be the vastly increased range of channels, but that instead of having a passive relation-ship with the TV screen, viewers will be able to interact with all the services that TV and its attendant technologies are able to provide.

We always say that who thinks of any innovation first does not matter, only the ability to use that innovation, to absorb it into one's vocabulary. But life is very unfair, and, when an artist manages to do immaculately what we think he ought to do, we generally repay him by just not noticing. Raoul Dufy is a perfect case in point. Certainly one would hardly think of him as an innovator of note. We fall back all too readily on the easy formulas about love of life, a brilliant sense of colour, Gallic charm and all the rest of it. Even walking round the major new retrospective of his work at the Hayward Gallery (from tomorrow until February 5) we are unlikely to be struck by any dazzling new insights, any extraordinary new way of seeing him and his work.

And yet just look, for instance, at the four large decorative murals painted in 1929 for the Weisweiler villa. They have all the familiar motifs - the exotic birds, the tower, the sailing ship, the obelisk, the open-air still-life – deployed in what seems to be a familiar way. But, then, look again at the apparently arbitrary but supremely artful way in which patches of colour are placed more or less to coincide with the crisply drawn forms. but have no relationship in shape at all, and seem to be going their own way happily towards abstraction. Which, when you consider the date of the painting, is pretty remarkable: other artists, such as Leger, were getting credit as bold inventors for the same thing years later. The additional irony, though, is that, even after we have registered intellectually Dufy's priority, it is still difficult to take in totally that it is so, because he does not have in any way the strenuous air of an experimenter: he simply uses his invention as though it has always

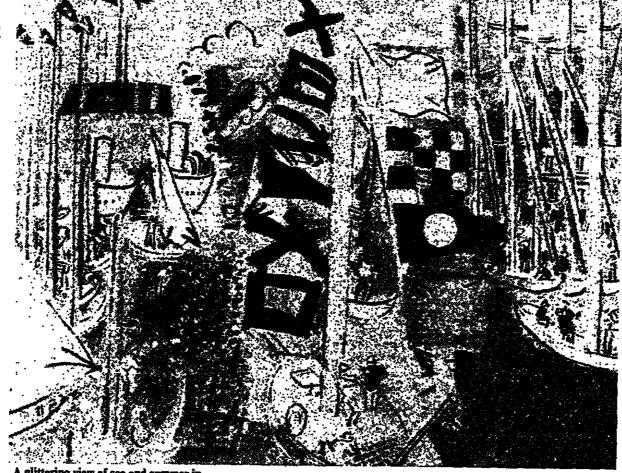

It is this quality of ease, apparent and very likely actual, which has tended to keep Dufy in a minor opinion is concerned. Needless to say, he does what he does very well, but is it really, well, serious? Can anything so easily approachable as his dashing glowing evocations of the race tracks. or his glittering pictures of sea and summer, be regarded as important? Surely there must be some angst somewhere before we can unreservedly accept? It had best be said at once that, if we are looking for hitherto undisclosed angst in this show, then we shall be disappointed. On the other hand, it does make us think again before we apply pejorative overtones to words like "decorative" or "charm". The early works especially, when Dufy was an idiosyncratic independent and then right at the centre of the birth of modernism along with Picasso, Braque and Apollinaire, show a brilliantly original way of seeing and showing, no less worthy of note because it seems to come from a natural cast of mind rather than being arrived at only by hard and conscious effort. Even in his most boldly cubist works, Dufy seems to be an instinctive artist rather than a

And all the better for it, we might add. If we doubt his seriousness, we need only move on to the fabric designs, which are happily made much of here. Fabric designs for Poiret? Surely those must be the acme of cultivated French frivolity, so abhorrent to the puritan streak in the average English spectator? But no. For one thing the stylistic innovations are even bolder here than in the paintings there are some, nearly 70 years old, which could teach Bridget Riley and Vasarely a thing or two. And, for another, they are full of a quite different but surely no less estimable seriousness: that of the craftsman who sets out with perfect gravity and humility to master another craft and not patronize it. Dufy's fabric designs are wonderful because they show his imagination at full stretch and because they are totally thought out in terms of their own medium. It is hard to imagine that this part of the show will not have a far-reacing effect on designers of our own time.

Dufy has suffered somewhat from his appalling popularity - the sales of prints and postcards are still enormous, for all the sneers of superior people. But that kind of popularity can be almost indistinguishable from anonymity. This show enables us not so much to revalue, as to value an unconsidered master from scratch. And the experience is charming and delightful - it would be absurd to try to take that away from Dufy.

From his previous show at Marlborough Fine Art, one might have supposed that Bill Jacklin too was an uncomplicated enjoyer of life, the sort of painter who could make a whole career out of appreciating

Degas's pencil study of Gouffé for light falls on a lemon. Even there, however, there were hints of unease not to mention the fact, which could mean anything or nothing, that he had first attracted attention as a sensitive minimalist. Jacklin's new show, at the same gallery until November 19, confirms all of this, but with the unease coming more to the fore. For example, the idea of Woman in a Chair in the earlier show, which was then fairly noncommittal, a study of a particular pose, has now become Man and Monster: the sirl's mouth is to something nasty behind the painting on the easel, while the painter works on regardless at a picture, not of her but of an heraldiclooking dragon. The still-lifes are still as warmly, relishingly painted as ever, but the presence, sometimes, of mysterious figures behind them is interestingly unsettling. And perhaps the most remarkable paintings in the show are two of old people in hospital, particularly Man with Bib, and the curiously wan full-length of a man by a window called The Meditation. A group of happy, superficial nudes seems intended to balance this effect, but they are finally the sort of painting that goes in one eye and out the other, while the night-side of Jacklin's talents firmly haunts the memory.

In his own life, Degas seems to have been a very complicated and rather mysterious man, but in his work the complexity was reserved for the workings of his artistic intelligence. You might imagine that he was so well-known that nothing new could be expected to emerge from a small show like that at David Carritt until December 9. But, somehow, seeing a group of such superb work all together in such a small space concentrates the mind remarkably. There are wonderful, not-very-familiar studies for familiar paintings, like the drawing of the bass-player Gouffe for L'Orchestre de l'Opéra. There are splendid oils like Aux Courses, with its odd precipitous perspective and witty reduction of the women's faces almost

And there are works like the nastel La Conversation, with its women conversing, exceptionally, in a rustic setting, which look improbably towards Pont Aven, or like the astonishing oil monotype Effet de Montagne, which bring us right into the middle of the twentieth century. Of course we know that the side of Degas's art which has been used on chocolate boxes is not really chocolate-boxy. But this show reminds us forcefully that, though on one level the easiest to take of the major Impressionists, on another he was one of the most searching and radical of Many works in this show come from the Ashmolean's remarkable holdings. Around the corner in St James's, at Morton Morris until December 2, is a show of Early English Drawings entirely from the Ashmolean. The variety, from Holbein to Fuseli, is astonishing, and it is hardly possible to do more than pick out personal favourites. Samuel Cooper's portrait head of Thomas Alcock is wonderfully acute, John "Baptist" Malchair's View of St Barnabas, Oxford, from the Artist's Window (1782) seems at least fifty years ahead of its time, and so does Thomas Jones's completely anachronistic oil sketch of Rooftops in Naples from the same year, a teasingly abstract conception of something which, in any case, surely no other artist at that time would have found interesting at all.

to purchase half an ounce of the pinched young man who rattled drug. It is estimated that there out his words like tracer fire; he getting younger all the time.

Addiction leads to criminality, or perhaps criminality leads to addiction: it is difficult to tell, just as it is impossible to know if some other drug or "escape" would not be found if heroin were extirpated. Most of the addicts themselves were desperate cases: anxious, weak, often garrulous but with no sense of self-worth. Such people always find ways of running to oblivion and then to death.

The documentary was the first of three in a series which.

Heroin (Granada) threw up the judging by the concentration suggestion that use of the drug last night on the case of Gary, is "like putting an electric will provide in thoroughness blanket around yourself" – what it lacks in sensationalism – although perhaps a somewhat there can be no drama in such a expensive one. He was actually youngsters who are, in fact, fortunate in having people around him who were willing to become interested in his fate: perhaps that in itself was enough to take him off the drug.

Heroin is composed exclusively by the "fly on the wall" method - it is a necessary one on such occasions, although the immediacy of "real life" situ-ations on television can often become as boring as real life itself. The programme could have done with editing since an important subject needs effective presentation.

Sweet Charity Crucible, Sheffield

First seen in Britain in 1967, this Cy Coleman/Neil Simon musical is surprisingly slight, apparently built to get by on a star central performance, a few great songs and a liberal helping of show-stopping Bob Fosse chorus numbers. With its single plot and few good supporting parts, it makes an odd choice for the latest in the Crucible's shining tradition of musical revivals. But Michael Elwyn's bubbling production makes it an evening of shared enjoy-

First soulmate as someone who can seen courting a smooth-faced crook in Dorothy Fields's crisp built!") only to get pushed into the Hudson and relieved of $200, the dance-hall hostess of the title has to make the running through a series of more or less ludicrous, always heartbreaking, encounters with men. "She runs her heart like a hotel - guys checkin' in and out all the time", a friend remarks.

confined for a chaste night in a film star's closet or for 20 minutes in a jammed lift with a cute but neurotic accountant called Oscar.

Suzanne Danielle's Charity is fizzy, funny and resilient with-out milking the pathos or the wacky personality too hard. She enjoys every minute of it, dances superbly and looks disconcerningly like the gamine Minnelli at times.

The singing however, is weak. Miss Danielle soon runs out of voice and breath, and her suitors are scarcely happier (one of them seemed to spend a whole verse searching for the key to sing it in). But all succeed as character performances, notably Jonathan Barlow as the never see the expected way to get along, and Francesca Whit-burn, her abrasive colleague who can and does.

Likewise, the big dance sequences such as "Big Spend-er" and "The Rhythm of Life" are true to setting and character but their choreography and light six-piece scoring lack the auth-entic brassy brutality. But, as a wry fable of a girl with big heart and personality cast only for a supporting part in romance, it is

Bedelian/Robbins

Queen Elizabeth Hall

To listen to a violinist like Haroutume Bedelian is to remember that a violin was once made of wood and gut. Not for him the over-cultivated sweetness that passes for perfection with many virtuosos, but instead a commitment to the music which rightly takes in the possibility of rough edges and impurities. Virtuosity comes to him as second nature, but it is used as a means to the interpretative freedom and sense of style that characterize his playing above all else.

Bedelian's programme, which he was partnered by the pianist Gerald Robbins, began with Reethoven's E flat major than trying to make the outer movements glitter with Haydoesque wit, both artists preferred the gritty approach that reveals this music's more forward-looking qualities. In the central Adagio con molt'espressione Bedelian spun an introspective cantabile line, thus heightening the work's affinity with the "Pathétique" Sonata which was composed soon afterwards.

PAUL EDDINGTON

Concerts Partita in D minor was given with at least as much intensity. Festival Hall

The last three movements followed one another almost without a break, and as a result the tension was built remorselessly movement by movement. Bedelian's reading of the final Chaconne was on the grandest scale, though still it was the composer who took first place, not the performer.

Naturally Bedelian maintained the lavish bow-strokes he used here for Richard Strauss's Violin Sonata of 1888, a slightly lumpish work which attempts, unsuccessfully, to transcend the constraints of its medium, as the formidable piano part alone, negotiated with ease by the ever resourceful and sympathetic Mr Robbins, made clear. The first movement is a fitful affair, and the finale's rhetoric seems a trifle overblows. Only the middle movement, the more or less celebrated "Improvisation", wholly satisfies.

In Debussy's Violin Sonata he was equally adept at the idiom, stripping all Teutonic profundity from his playing to leave the textures light, delicate and clear but at the same time creating a mysterious, other-

The last of his three-concert series with the orchestra of which he is now conductor laureate, Sunday's programme of Rossini, Hummel and Mozart by Riccardo Muti and the Philharmonia seemed more of an encore than a grand finale.

Compared with Reethoven

and Bruckner last week, the programme seemed on paper a mere makeweight. But Muti and his players were acutely aware of the opportunities, necessity, for sheer performance in music of more airy substance. Muti found a particularly beguiling pro-portion of tone and tone of voice for the last of what Rossini called his "six dreadful sonatas" for strings, neither urging its case too strongly nor overglossing its writing. Rather, the edge and texture of ensemble were retained, darting figuration was immaculately even, connecting ideas were shrewdly and sharply shaded in.

It put a good part of the orchestra into just the mood for Hummel's Trumpet Concerto, in which the Philharmonia's dusted out, revealing those unpredictable leaps and turns of invention which refresh and distinguish Hummel's underpłayed music. Mr Wallace in turn pos-

The China syndrome

Robert Adley, the Tory MP for Christchurch who is chairman of the British-Chinese parliamentary group, is in the Government's bad books because he thinks sometimes says, that ministers are in danger of mishandling their re-lations with the People's Republic of China over the future of Hongkong. From time to time he is taken aside for a quiet word of correction on behalf of Mrs Thatcher, but he had no real evidence until yesterday that his views were making any

But then came a telephone call from a friend in Hongkong, which he is visiting later this month. The friend told Adley, on excellent authority, that an official of the Hongkong government has asked for information to be sought which might be used to discredit Adley before his arrival. Adley is flattered.

Shifting faces

You don't have to be Arthur Scargill to be full of fearful speculation as to what the National Coal Board chairman, Ian MacGregor, may do next; you just have to be an NCB executive. A few days ago, senior executives were called in by MacGregor and asked to explain, in ten minutes flat, what they did and why they should continue to do it. Since then, there has been some shifting of the NCB workload. Mr Mcmik Spanton had been shifted from overseas development to industrial relations (although it is understood that Mr MacGregor might be hovering around on industrial relations issues). Mr Lawrence John Mills, who was head of the NCB's accountability teams, now heads the overseas section. The accountability teams will report directly to Mr MacGregor.

 When Michael Parkinson stepped out of his Sunday presenting role at TV-am last May to visit Australia, viewing figures for the Sunday morning show stood at 400,000. Since David Frost took over the programme, the audience has risen to 1,200,000. Parkinson is back on the 26th of this month but TV-am won't say if Frost is prepared to hand over without a struggle the programme that he has built up.

The Communications Committee was chaired by Shirley Williams and contained such williams and contained such famous communicators as Richard Attenborough, and advertising agencording to an SDP spokesperson, "The Communications Committee got so large and unwieldly that it couldn't really communicate."
Communing with the Committee on party political broadcasting will now fall to David Owen and SDP MP John Cartwright.

Existence of some rules can be discerned

All of this can be seen reinforcing the view that any use of nuclear weapons would be contrary the laws of war, or even classifiable as a war crime; and that preparations for a possible nuclear war, especially the placing of nuclear bases near to centres of civilian population, should be halted.

However, there are many reasons for questioning whether the laws of war can resolve for us all the tangled moral-cum-practical questions raised by the advent of nuclear weapons. Two reasons may be cited. First, the laws of war have never been very successful in addressing directly either the general issue of bombing from the air, or the particular issue of use of nuclear weapons. They have much more to say on less apocalyptic matters, such as the treatment of prisoners or civilians who are in the hands of an

Nuremberg and Tokyo after the Second World War, they said many important things about many kinds war crimes, but they did not address the city-bombing which had been practised by the Allies, least of all the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki: an omission which led one judge at the Tokyo tribunal, Mr Justice Pal, to deliver a lengthy and detailed dissenting

This failure to tackle the problem posed by nuclear weapons is only too evident in the laws of war conventions concluded since 1945. In that period there have been 10 new agreements, totalling maybe 100,000 words, yet the words "nuclear weapons" do not appear in them. Indeed, in appending signa-tures to one international agreement, the 1977 Geneva Protocol I on international armed conflicts, both the United Kingdom and the United States went so far as to declare that the protocol neither regulates nor prohibits the use of uclear weapons. Despite the failure of diplomats, statesmen and lawvers to conclude binding international rules restricting or prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons, the existence of some rules can be discerned. The actual non-use of nuclear weapons since 1945 establishes a powerful precedent, Moreover, governments have not entirely evaded laws of war aspects of nuclear deterrence. For example, in a statement made at the United Nations in December 1968, the United States government indicated that the principles of law relative to the use of weapons in war "apply as well to the use of nuclear and similar weapons".

A second reason for doubting whether the laws of war can resolve all the problems posed by nuclear weapons has to do with distinction between use and possession. Even if the laws of war had a great deal to say about the use of nuclear weapons, they would not necessarily prohibit possession. Only if they prohibited any and every possible use of nuclear weapons, even as a reprisal, and also prohibited the threat of their use, would they necessarily rule out all deployment.

Traditionally, the laws of war have addressed the issue of use of weapons rather than possession or deployment - these latter matters being covered under the separate rubric of "arms control". For example, the 1925 Geneva Protocol weapons, but says nothing about their possession. Many states, including the United Kingdom, made formal reservations to the effect that if an enemy ignored the protocol, so would they; and it is the view of many that such deterrent threats helped to ensure the observance of the protocol in most of the hostilities in the Second World War. In short, the 1925 protocol has at least partly the character of a "no-first-use" agree-

Underlying these two reasons for caution about the laws of war as a means of resolving the frightful nuclear dilemmas we face is a more fundamental problem. There is an unavoidable degree of tension between the laws of war on the one other. The former seek to limit war, to reduce its cruelty, and to ameliorate its effects on non-comba tant individuals and neutral states Most forms of nuclear deterrence, by contrast, seek to prevent war by making it so utterly frightful that states will fear to resort to it.

The idea of limits has proved enduring

In practice, a laws of war approach is compatible with some forms of deterrence – as the history of the 1925 Geneva Protocol show The idea that even in an age of nuclear deterrence there must be some clear limits to the use of nuclear weapons has proved very enduring, and finds its most common expression in a demand for no first use of nuclear weapons. Thus a resolution adopted by the UN General Assembly on December 9, 1981 proclaimed: "States and statesmen that resort first to the use of nuclear weapons will be commit ting the gravest crime against humanity." This is of course a This is of course a challenge to Nato's current reliance on possible first use of nuclear weapons in the event of conventional attack - a policy which also involves serious problems of credibility and public acceptability.

The aspects of nuclear deterrence which currently pose the most acute difficulties so far as the laws of war are concerned are the reliance on a strategy of possible first use; the targeting of nuclear weapons on cities; their basing near centres of population; and the long-lasting effects of radiation and radioactive fall-out. In one way or another the cruise missile deployments touch on all these aspects. But we will be very lucky if the aspects are clearly illuminated, let alone definitively answered, in the American court three per cent of the population. The party cannot count on more, but it holds the power. It wants, perhaps even needs, at least some kind of accommodation with the church if not friendship.

This precarious détente falls far short of the friendship at which Time magazine hinted in its Luther Jubilee cover story. It purported to depict "Party secretary Honecker with a cross on his lapel." Neither Christians nor communists would live comfortably with that kind of gesture. The man in the picture is not Honecker at all but Erfurt's Lutheran Dean who happens to be a stern critic of both eastern and western militarism. The church's pacifist tendencies are a sore point and not the only one, between church and state. In the words of Klaus Gysi, Secretary of State for Church Affairs, relations between the two are based "not on friendship but on presentablessee" but on reasonableness'

Perhaps the East German church's most telling comment on the Luther Jubilee is made in one of its posters. The pedestal of a Luther statue stands empty, without the man. Under it is a quote from Luther. "Above all things, fear, love and trust God." The state may celebrate the man. But the man points us to God.

The orphan culture of Austria

The Josefplatz is enclosed on three sides by the dirty white facade of the old Hofburg, whose plain doors, lifeless windows, and dusty stucco give it the appearance of a backcloth for amateur theatricals. To the casual passer by this is the least interesting space in Vienna, note-worthy only as a reminder of the modest style and provincial shabbiness of the Habsburg crown. Behind one of these doors

however, lies the greatest secular

interior in Europe - J. B. Fischer von Erlach's Hufbibliothek, a composition at once bursting with vitality and totally at rest, integral in its conception, and also intimate and craftsmanslike in every tiny part. Behind another door is the Spanish Riding School, where horses are made to prance and posture for no other reason than the sheer wonder of it. A third door conceals the official apartments, while a fourth opens every Sunday into the West Porch of the Augustineskirche, where whosoever wishes may participate in the true liturgy of the Roman Church, and hear its meaning echoed by their and orchestra in the life-giving language of Haydn. To someone who knows what these doors conceal, the Josefplatz is full of meaning this shabby box is the outer wrapping of a stupendous culture, in which religion, learning, architecture and music are mingled inextricably, along with the sublime futilities of horsemanship and the petty tragedies of kings.

On October 26 I surveyed this scene from the first floor apartments of the Palais Pallavicini, where cream marble walls, gilded mirrors and Venetian candelabras compete for space above a teak and satinwood parquet. October 26 is a significant day for Austrians, being the anniversary of the departure from their territory of the Soviet 'liberator". Certain things still testify to the ten years of occupation. There is the Red Army monument in the Schwarzenbergplatz, for example, known sarcastically as the Tomb of the Unknown Father - a hideous mass of Stalinist kitsch, which the Austrians are obliged by treaty to conserve. There is also the intense feeling of relief and gratitude, which is rehearsed every year on October 26 and which now forms

the substance of Austrian patriot-

Despite the pressure of modern history, which has confined Austria against its inner logic within the borders of a nation state, Austrian patriotism remains cosmopolitan. In the gorgeous salon of the Palais Pallavicini, the Anton Gindely Prize - awarded each year for historical research into the Danube monarchy - was being presented. This national occasion, attended by burghers, hofrats, herr professors and herr doktors, is taken very seriously. For the Gindely Prize is a symbol of faith in Austrian history, and in the cultural and political identity which, despite the unutterable catastrophes of our century, unites the citizens of Vienna with all those whose ancestors were once ruled from the shabby palace on the Josefplatz. One of the two recipients was of Madeyski a statesman from the Polish region of the Habsburg Empire. Two musicians had been commanded; they were also Polish, and played only Folish music, including Szymanowski's self-con-scously folkish nocturne for violinand piano. The address was given by a Polish professor named Sartos-zewsky on the topic of "Patriotism Today". It is difficult to magne such an expression of patriotic sentiment outside Austria; to imagine, say, a gathering of Spanish dignitaries, assembled for a national festival, in which a prize is presented to a Dutch-born author for a book about a Dutch statesman, and in which the ears are assailed, first by difficult Dutch music, and then by a lecture from a Dutch professor on the international character of the patriotic urge. Professor Bartoszewsky touched every Austrian heart, however, as he described the difference between the nationalism which nearly destroyed Europe, and the patriotism which has so far preserved it. For the nationalist the individual is nothing, and the people everything for the patriot, the individual is everything, even though bound by an indefets-ible duty to his people, place and time. Listening to this Polish spokesman for Halisburg values, I felt how far the work of restoration had proceeded, how much of that old reverence for local custom and general law had been revived, and how premature was the title of he great book - Die Well von Gestern-(The World of Yesterday) - in which Stefan Zweig lamented what he supposed to be its final passing

The prize-giving began, and the Austrians took over. Their nervous humour, and their sly digs at political rivals, showed that they were party men, for whom Austrian patriotism is a matter less of patriotism lies above politics, and no mere party can appropriate it without destroying it. In Austria, however despite all the efforts of restoration that have raised laws and institutions still breathing from their temporary grave, it is the party, and not the country, that is the major focus of public life and attention.

The Palais Pallavicini bears a name redolent of Habsburg catholicity. Confronted by its empty rooms, the visitor is impressed with a sense that they speak for the whole of Austria: refined, liberal tolerant, but belonging to no one. Austrian culture cries out for the spirit of ownership. It wishes above all, to belong to someone, someone other than, and higher than, a political party. Only then will patriotism find its true focus. Every Austrian knows this, but he has been persuaded to deny what he feels; persuaded to think that monarchy is somehow outmoded, atavistic, the enemy. rather than the only begetter, of cosmonolitan ties.

It is surely time for the Austrians to cast off those Enlightenment superstitions, and to do what their still living institutions require. Besides, they have their opportunity. Otto von Habsburg is an astute and experienced politician, an intelligent observer of European politics; he Polish extraction, and was to be Review. What more could they want.

A green and peasant land

I have three children and they will, I worker all came to a new undersuppose, have to earn their own living sometime as the year 2000 looms into view. What on earth will they do? If you believe like myself that we will not have eradicated massive, permanent unemployment by then, you will wonder what we can do to find more niches for people who want to work for a

Like most people, I imagine that the future will provide something for people prepared to enter into an unholy alliance with machines, such as bankers and accountants, blinking at their VDU's

But suppose my children - or others - are not born engineers or entrepreneurs? Suppose they are the sort of mild-mannered, hard-working, skilful people who would like a stable sort of a job to do, in which they could display quiet dedication to a job well done?

Nothing made, no job performed, by such people will be able to compete on price with the high-tech product churned out mechanically. Luddites will turn out to have been right all along:

I propose the creation of the New Peasant. Ever since Cobbett saw so clearly that the British middle and upper classes were up to no good when they crushed the peasants we have had cause to mourn the peculiar way in which the decencies of the feudal system were swept away along with its indecencies. We fell prey, he saw, to the world in which the relations of employer and employee were mediated entirely by wages and each was discharged of obligation to the other.

Besides cooperatives, in which people group together to share risk and profit, why shouldn't we discover a new, proper relationship between the owner of capital or land, and the worker who makes something of them?

Several sorts of business would make a good example, one of them hinted at by John May's letter to The Times (September 12). Good forestry is only marginally profitable these days: the better the forestry the less immediately profitable it is. Coppicing, the ancient craft of cropping a woodland so that it produced everything from broom handles to building timber, could allow wood products to compete with plastic and concrete, but only if the taxman, the landowner and the the next century.

They would all be getting something worthwhile. The state would be helped with foreign exchange by cutting down on imports of oil for the manufacture of plastics; the landowner would have beautiful, rather, than a presently derelict, woodlands, and the worker - the New Peasant - could be given an agreeable, easy going living.

Farming is also ripe for the New

Peasant in an age when jobs are increasingly scrapped in favour of petrochemicals. Intelligent farmers may well be able to strike deals with people offering cheap labour in return for a return to the land and time of their own. It is important to note that the New Peasant is a voluntary peasant, embracing a poverty of cash in exchange for a richness of lifestyle, in a contract in which no subservience was implied. Water transport offers another opportunity. Energy-efficient inland, coastal or international cargo-carrying is not often profitable (though the sums will increasingly go in their favour as fuel prices rise). The difficulty has been that many transport methods which forgo speed and energy add more to labour costs than they save in fuel cost. But the New Peasant could volunteer to forgo some wages in exchange for working a sailing or canal barge, or a clipper, rather than roaring about in a juggernaut, of whiling away time in tedious supertankers (which already have difficulty in keeping their crews)

The equation of fuel versus labour costs might alter dramatically if the interesting possibility of a slow, fuelsaving sailing ship was run by people who preferred it to the better-paying, rapid, energy-profilgate motor vessel,

The New Peasant is a little like the craftsman of the William Morris movement. Modern craftsmen have in general been dependent for their workshop paradise upon the rich world buying their product at vast expense. Nothing wrong in that of course. But the New Craftsman should be producing quite ordinary things (foods and services) at ordinary prices. It is this new relationship to the capital and land which imaginative entrepteneurs and workers will have to invent for

There is no such encircling gloom for the British economy. Britain will achieve a higher growth rate in 1983 than any other member of the EEC. It has the lowest rate of public borrowing in the Community. It is below the average rate of price inflation. It is only one per cent above the average rate of unemployment with Belgium, Ireland and the Netherlands, far in excess, and the current trend looking even more favourable.

It is sad to see so many businessmen, even after four years of a Thatcher government, still collecting together to make calls on the government to "do something" about unemploydo about unemployment is to reduce the rate of inflation and work towards the achievement of price stability. It is up to businessmen to take advantage of the general environment thus created. Some of the less vocal members of the business community seem to be doing so, to enormous success, will provide job.

also escaped yesterday's rhetoric. Unemployment is often portrayed as a dead weight of humanity within the population.

It is far from that. Though there pessimism that it is a surprise one would not know that 1,000 new jobs are created every day in the manufacturing sector, that 300,000 people leave the unemployed register every month, most of them for new jobs; that 25,000 people find a new job every day of every week of the year, that 10,000 new companies are being created every month. Each year the economy sees six million people changing jobs, which includes some take-up from the unemployment register. This autumn the trends are even more satisfactory. In the south east, one third more school leavers are finding jobs than last year and vacancies for school leavers are at least 40 per cent up on last year's figure.

A delegate yesterday complained that, while politicians debated what should be done to the British economy, "British industry is bleeding to death". It is a strange kind of haemorrhage which involves an annual transfusion from the taxpayer of £3.500 million pounds in subment. What the government can sidy and current grants, capital grants of £360 million, and copious subsidies by extension through money paid out to agriculture, housing and defence contracts. But there is more to this spoon-feeding than that. The Youth Training Scheme, which is proving now to be an trained manpower for British industry at a cost to the taxpayer of more than £2,000 million per annum. In West Germany, industrial training costs £7,500 million pounds per annum and it is the employers there who pay.

If the CBI was really representative of the whole tone of British industry, that would be depressing indeed, since the message which would go out to the world would damage the climate of optimism which is a necessary factor in stimulating investment and which is beginning to show signs of encouragement. That kind of business confidence requires a firm expectation that inflation will continue to be brought down, which can only be achieved by persistence in government.

Fortunately the CBI is no representative of British industry as a whole. We do not hear much about the sustained growth in employment among small businesses which has occurred throughout the recession; nor about the continued growth in productivity of manufacturing which dispels earlier fears that previous productivity gains would be once and for all. Perhaps the pessimism prevalent at the CBI yesterday sprung from the older industries which have been too conditioned by featherbedding from the tax payer. They must find it hard to break out of the convenient cant of corporatist thinking. From the figures available however, it is clear that there are many other business men who are not so hide-bound, not so pessimistic, and are just getting on with the

ONE IN THE EYE FOR THE GENERALS

Turkey continues its tradition of the blunder theory provides a had started applying his econnot fitting easily into the categories of other people's political thoughts. If this is democracy, why was the people's choice of representatives so narrowly and arbitrarily restricted by administrative measures, taken in violation of the constitution by the very regime which drewjup that constitution and earnestly, not to say insistently, recommended it to the people only a year ago? But, if this is dictatorship, how is it that the people have been able to make a choice which is not the one recommended to them by caused that regime serious embarrassment if not humiliation? Clearly it is neither fish nor fowl, let alone good red herring. An example of the latter species would be the suggestion that the whole thing is an elaborately contrived confidence trick by a regime all along determined to pursue Mr Ozal's monetarist policies and skilfully obtaining spurious popular mandate for them by passing him off as an opposition leader. Whoever thinks that has surely not understood the mentality of the Turkish officer. A man like General Kenan Evren does not become President of the Republic in order to make himself a kind of lightning conductor for popular resentment. He expects to speak to the people with authority, and does not expect that authority to be ignored or flouted.

As so often in human affairs, the conspiracy theory. Turkey is at present ruled by a group of generals who were brought up to believe that democracy is a good thing, and who know that that belief is shared by those with whom they wish to align themselves in international affairs. but who have rather little understanding of what democracy really involves. These generals wish to keep "democracy" firmly under their own supervision.

en-vear dresidendal d with extensive powers, for their leader, General Evren, This year they intended to secure a parliamentary majority for a party headed by another of their number, retired general Turgut Sunalp. To ensure this they firmly disqualified from competing any political leader who seemed likely to attract a large popular following. But some opposition was needed, to avoid the charge of a one party state. A retired civil servant of mild social democracy views, Mr Needet Calp, was encouraged to form a "populist party" to collect some of their former left wing votes; and Mr Turgut Ozal, the technocrat who had run the austerity phase of the new regime's economic policy, was allowed to form a "motherland party" to canvass his neo liberal doctrine. What the generals failed to more plausible explanation than omic remedies as under secretary to Mr Demirel in 1979-80 and who by 1982 had reduced the rate of inflation from 107 to 21 per cent, would, in the enforced absence of any direct continuator of Mr Demirel's Justice Party, be more attractive to conservative voters than the colourless disciplinarian figure of Mr Sunalp, while also picking up a number of liberal votes simply because he appeared less directly sponsored by the regime than either of his rivals. The Last year they secured a bandwagon effect developed, hich General Evren's ill-iu intervention on Friday may have accelerated rather than impeded.

> The resulting situation is awkward for almost everyone. The regime has got a parliament, and presumably has to appoint a government, not of its choosing. Mr Ozal, if he becomes Prime Minister, will have to work with a president who has publicly branded him a liar, on the basis of a popular mandate achieved more by default than by free choice. Turkey's allies, who know that Mr Ozal is a competent and courageous economic manager, will on the whole wish him well notwithstanding that his democratic credentials may be unconvincing. What they must hope is that his election will accelerate Turkey's progress towards genuine democracy and respect for human rights. It is no use pretending that that has yet

THEIR MEN IN HAVANA

The American intervention in Cuba to perform this important Grenada was a set-back for Havana, but an even greater blow for Moscow. Although President Castro ensured that the Cuban casualties he welcomed back from Grenada had more publicity than the thousands of others killed and wounded in Cuba's military involvements elsewhere, it is harder than ever to see what benefit the people of Cuba are supposed to gain from maintaining their considerable military presence overseas: 18,000 troops in Angola, 13,000 in Ethiopia, 2,000 in Nicaragua and hundreds more in Mozambique, South Yemen and other Third World countries.

Indeed the greatest enthusiasm for Cuban intervention in such a wide range of trouble spots is to be found not in Havana, but in the Kremlin. The latest annual of the Moscow Institute of International Affairs praises Cuba for sending military contingents to Angola and Ethiopia "at the request of the governments of these countries to help them defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity". Cuba has sent "tens of thousands of builders, medical workers and other specialists" to many developing countries and "has come out in support of the patriotic forces of El Salvador". Cubans have a military service of three years and most specialists sent overseas can drop their spades or stethoscopes for a Kalashnikov when ordered 10 defend the claimed achievements of revolutionary regimes.

The Soviet leaders rely on role in areas where a large Soviet military presence would cause a major East-West confrontation; they see the Cubans as an intrinsic part of their "world socialist system". In a front-page editorial devoted to the anniversary of the October Revolution, Red Star, the newspaper of the Soviet armed forces, speaks of those countries which are "closely combined in the socialist community, united in ideology and aims". In full accordance with this doctrine of "socialist internationalism" East Germany and Czechoslovakia are preparing sites for Soviet missiles while Cubans use Soviet weapons on several continents. subsidized by Soviet economic aid. But the cost is high. In return for sugar which the USSR scarcely needs. Cuba receives a vast range of valuable Soviet exports, including machinery, oil and basic foodtuffs, Moscow has allowed Cuba to run an annual trade deficit of several hundred million roubles.

Now the Cubans have been expelled from Grenada, as have to offer the developing countries Soviet diplomats and other allied nationals. Even worse for Moscow is the growing recognition that American intervention met with the approval of the Grenadians, contradicting and to prove that there is a Soviet claims that all patriotic sound alternative to the violent forces continue to oppose the United States aggressors. Headlines in Pravda last week proclaiming that "Grenada should be free" had a distinctly ironic brought his boys home too; there ring Fulfilling their obligations is more than enough for them to socialist internationlism, do in Cuba. to Soviet troops are waging war against the hostile population of Afghanistan; although repeatedly reinforced and supported by increased air strikes on Afghan villages, they are unable to crush resistance. Both interventions were widely condemned, but the similarity stops there.

In size of territory and population Grenada may seem insignificant, but in terms of Soviet influence in the Caribbean and Central America the loss of the tiny island may prove much more than a temporary set-back for the USSR. Pro-Washington forces in the region will be encouraged, while those who have looked to the "world socialist system" for help should realise that it is neither the inevitable future of all mankind nor the source of a better life here and now. President Reagan must show that his decisive but controversial action has indeed benefited the people of Grenada, and in this Britain too has animportant part to play.

Of course the West has more than the USSR or Cuba. Yet economic aid must be applied effectively, not to prop up corrupt regimes but to encourage trust in democratic phuralism revolution widely promoted by Cuba. The US marines are already leaving Grenada. It is high time the President Castro

International airport in Grenada

Sir, I do not know what Lt-Col Cave's qualifications are to write on international airport design and construction matters, but his letter that appeared in your issue of November 2 contains so many inaccuracies that I feel compelled, as managing director of the British company having a major involvement in the construction of Point Salines airport, to acquaint your readers with at least those facts that relate to matters he raised.

The four storage tanks were manufactured and installed on the airfield by a Cuban company. The two smaller tanks, with a capacity of 250,000 US gallons, would contain aviation fuel to be pumped ashore through a pipeline from tankers moored in the bay. Having orig-inally specified this system for landing aviation fuel, the Grenadian authorities subsequently decided to install two larger tanks with a capacity of 750,000 US gallons to supplement the island's meagre storage capacity for motor fuels.

Had this airport been designed as a military facility, then positioning the country's strategic reserves of fuel above ground would have been an act of unbelievable stupidity.

It has been suggested the runway length is excessive for civil use. However, the following factors determine take-off distance: design, temperature and altitude, aircraft type and weight and route distances. If an operator intends to fly a Boeing 747 aircraft from Grenada to Europe, then 9,000 ft, which is the length that has been built, is the minimum length of runway required, regardless of frequency.

The new airport was designed to replace the tiny airport at Pearls on the north-east coast of Grenada and to act as a diversion facility for Trinidad and other islands at that end of the Caribbean. Within the Lesser Antilles eight islands of

Banking charges

Sir, The Big Five banks, led by NatWest, appear to be determined to reduce their number of depositors and to discourage new clients by introducing yet again higher banking charges. This is working totally against the best interests of the country, which is to have all employees paid by credit transfer so that industry and commerce can be more efficient and competitive. Perhaps certain banks should look at their efficiency before we all transfer to the Giro, Co-op, or a few others, to obtain the free banking we a "life" and these ones looked old. have received for many years.

It has always been very much to the banks' advantage to look after our money and I have seen no lack of profit in the past few years to justify a move which will slow down the streamlining of British industry. Yours faithfully. JOHN FORDHAM,

Pension arrangements

From Mr A. G. Fathers

Sir, Your correspondent, Mr Martin Paterson (October 27) describes a final salary scheme as "a form of insurance relying on a pooled fund to meet its commitments and backed by the employer." In fact it relies upon the contributions of all those paying into the fund who, because of redundancy or other reasons for leaving, do not stay to enjoy the fruits of their investment and salary sacrifice.

Sadly, more and more executives are finding out the hard way the disadvantages of not having their own individual fund. In my own experience, out of six directors who served on the board of a subsidiary company within a large conglomerate only one has any chance of receiving his full pension at normal reprement age.

By comparison with the problem of not setting a pension at all, or at least getting a very inadequate pension, the problem raised by Mr Paterson of retiring at a time of low inflation looms very small. The best advice to any reasonably paid executive in the private sector is to have his own pension fund. Yours faithfully.

Life of housing

From Lord Ragian

Sir, While I wholly agree with Mr John Perry, of the Royal Town Planning Institute (October 20) that it is false economy to skimp house maintenance, his view that houses grow obsolete with age is one I hoped had gone out over a decade

Up to that time, not only had thousands of expensively replaced houses been condemned for want of something as cheap to install as a damp course, but whole streets of good houses were being destroyed on the principle that buildings have

Perhaps the majority of farm-houses in this county are between 300 and 400 years old. Northwards in Herefordshire they and timberframed cottages come even older. Houses do not wear out; in fact it can be said with confidence that the older the house the sounder it is likely to be.

Therefore Mr Perry need not, I think, be concerned about how to replace houses built in the 1880s. which as it happens was a period of particularly high-quality building. Any construction faults such houses may have had will long ago have been discovered and dealt with. However, as Mr Switzer (October.

25) has mentioned, the same unfortunately cannot yet be said of dwellings built since the last war, many of which still need rectification, some of it expensive. A number of these will not, I suppose, survive 100 years on. But given normal maintenance and suitable modernisation, those Victorian houses are likely to be giving good service then, with a prospect of many more years of it to come,

Yours faithfully, RAGLAN, Cefntilla, Usk, Gwent. October 25.

Farm tenancies From Mr R. B. K. Dyott

Sir, I entirely endorse the sentiments expressed by Mr Peter Trumper and others (November 1) concerning farm tenancies.

As a landowner who has reluctantly had to participate in joint ventures to avoid creating tenancies, I can confirm that there is absolutely no incentive whatsoever in the Agricultural Holdings Bill which would in any way induce me to consider granting a tenancy instead. I am, Sir, yours etc, R. B. K. DYOTT, Freeford Manor, Lichfield, Staffordshire,

Unsatisfactory test in Nilsen case

From Professor Nigel D. Walker Sir, The definition of diminished responsibility in the 1957 Act is responsibility in the 1957 Act is certainly unsatisfactory, as Mr Nicholson-Lord's article of November 5 ("The mass killings that put psychiatry on trial") says. Proposals for improving it have been made from time to time, including those of the Butler committee in 1975, which still await implementation implementation. The basic problem, however, is this. Both the defence of insanity and that of diminished responsibility (d.r.) require the jury to be persuaded of two things, not one: first, that at the relevant time the defendant was suffering from "disease of the mind" (in modern parlance "mental disorder") or in the case of d.r. "abnormality of mind". There can be no doubt that the minds of Nilsen and Sutcliffe were abnormal. But the jury must also be persuaded that that the "disease of the mind" or the "abnormality" had certain conse-quences. In the case of d.r. these are efined as "substantial impairment of his mental responsibility for his acts...

The phrase is shockingly drafted; but behind it lay the sensible intention that the defendant should benefit if, and only if, his self-control or his awareness of what he was doing or his appreciation of its wrongness was diminished, and diminished to a "substantial" extent. Thus a person might have very abnormal desires and yet have sufficient "mental responsibility" to be excluded from the definition of

The man in the street may assume that desires so abnormal as Nilsen's or Sutcliffe's automatically imply diminished responsibility, but the law does not.

I am etc, NIGEL WALKER As from King's College, Cambridge. November 5.

From Dr G. Robertson Sir, Now that the trial of Mr Dennis Nilsen is over it seems reasonable to ask what motivated the raising of the defence of manslaughter through diminished responsibility.

It was reported in the press that defence counsel suggested that the finding of the court would have an effect upon the way in which the then accused was to be treated in prison. Such reports must have been incomplete as it is patent nonsense to suggest that prison authorities, medical or otherwise, would treat a prisoner differentially on the basis of a jury's findings.

There was no dispute as to fact; no alibi was raised; no question of disposal by means of a hospital order was suggested and the accused was not called upon to give evidence. Sentence was not an issue in this particular case. There was no the question of insanity was not in dispute among the psychiatric

Dual key doubts

From Professor R. T. Booth Sir, I am incredulous at the importance which is being attached in many quarters to the apparent security which might result if a dual-key" system was incorporated in the cruise missile fire-control mechanisms.

It is virtually impossible to design a safety device which is incapable of being defeated or misused if there is sufficient incentive. If we cannot trust the Americans not to launch cruise missiles without the agreement of the British Prime Minister, what confidence could we have that they will not incorporate mechanisms which will allow them to override the dual-key system if it suited their convenience?

Severn bridge

From Professor N. Kurti, F.R.S. Sir, I liked the letter (November 5) from the Managing Director of H.T.V. (High Tonnage Vehicles?) Ltd, exhorting business motorists to use the train: "... more expensive but quicker if parking areas were expanded and profitable for BR to increase existing services."

Noble and laudable sentiments, applicable just as convincingly to heavy lorries which, weight for weight, cause probably more damage to bridges and roads than passenger cars. Yours faithfully,

Dressing down

From Admiral of the Fleet Lord

Sir, As one of the assessors who selected the design for the statue of Lord Mountbatten it is perhaps my responsibility to reply to Mr Ludovic Kennedy's letter of November 5. Mr Kennedy asks when Lord Mountbatten might have been seen wearing binoculars, aignillettes, the Garter star and the Order of Merit all at the same time. The short answer is on board her Majesty's Yacht Britannia at her Majesty's silver jubilee review of the Fleet in 1977, when in addition he was wearing his medals and sword. There may have been other occasions, but I can vouch for that

The maquette that Mr Belsky submitted to the assessors showed Lord Mountbatten with binoculars; this we all liked; it conveyed the man of action image. Among his to suffer the evidence as presented. One may ask to what purpose; to what effect; why? Yours faithfully, GRAHAM ROBERTSON, Institute of Psychiatry, De Crespigny Park, Denmark Hill, SE5. November 5.

From Mr Alastair Laing

Sir. David Nicholson-Lord's article today (November 5) on the Nilsen trial presents it as an illustration of the doubtful standing of psychiatry as an aid to the forensic debate over a mass-murderer's responsibility for his acts. Confusion rests, however, not with psychiatry but with the law. Not only is Nicholson-Lord perfectly correct in pointing out that psychiatrists are being required to give evidence in relation to a concept - "such abnormality of mind as substantially impairs mental responsibility" - produced by lawyers rather than psychiatrists, but the whole notion of "responsi-bility" for one's acts has been eroded the gradual substitution of rehabilitation for retribution in the penal system. Forensic procedures concerned with establishing the presence or absence of mens rea thus have courts taking evidence from those whose business it is to establish the presence or absence of a pathological condition - which is a very different thing - prior to the passing of a sentence (in the case of mens rea being established) governed by an uneasy compromise between notions of retribution and a quite different set of criteria. The logical concomitant of a legal system built on the concept of mens rea is a retributive penal system: in establishing that an accused was guilty whilst of sound mind, a court is simultaneously declaring his capacity for punishment.

A rehabilitative system, by contrast, assumes a disorder in the case of someone found guilty and its only concern, in passing sentence, should be whether the convicted person would respond better to the deterrent effect of incarceration or to therapeutic treatment under restraint.

Where both psychiatry and rehabilitation fail the law in the case of otherwise rational mass-murderers, such as Sutcliffe and Nilsen, is that the deeds are the only reliable evidence for the condition; and whilst this puts psychiatrists into the curious position - not wished on any other form of expert witness, such as criminal pathologists - of appearing by the very act of diagnosis to pre-empt the verdict of the court as to the issue of responsibility, it makes any idea of verifiable rehabilitation inconceivable. So long as the concept of mens rea remains at the core of our legal system the courts would do better to adopt the second of David Nicholson-Lord's alternatives and not call upon psychiatry at all.

Yours faithfully. ALASTAIR LAING, 1441/2 Sinclair Road, W14. November 5.

The Booker prize

From Mr Christopher Sinclair-

Sir, Controversy is always an excellent thing, so why indeed not for books? Claire Tomalin in her letter (November 2) criticises Neil Lyndon's article about the Booker prize. Mr Lyndon can defend himself, but my reading of his piece did not give me the impression that he was denouncing the idea of the Booker prize, but merely some of the media shenanigans surrounding

I agree with her that anything which helps promote books is to be welcomed, and have always warmly supported any Book Marketing Council enterprise in this area. But I fear that I was not pulling Mr Lyndon's leg.

Why should not publishers give some care and thought to the books which they submit for a prize, and indeed why should they not make a semi-educated guess at what any jury, or any member of that jury, might like? The publisher may guess wrong, but it seems a harmless enough game, at the very least. And, who knows, he might be right.

Pressure should always be deplored and I cannot believe that any publisher would indulge in it, or any member of a jury be influenced by it. The drawing up of a short list by a publisher is, on the other hand, no more culpable than placing a bet with Ladbrokes and conceivable a little less risky.

Science report

The lethal lobster

By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

The proverb that one man's meat is another man's poison applies more directly to animals than to the way it is used to describe the fickleness

Two examples of this literal discoveries from unrelated lines of research.

One investigation showed that a species of king prawn and a sand lobster found in the deep ocean off Australia, store a compound of arsenic which is lethal in small doses to humans. The second involves a seed-eating beetle which thrives on a complex substance called L-Canavanine, a deadly natural insecticide for other creatures when produced by a particular family of plants.

The work on the prawns and sand lobster was done by Mr Frank Whitfield, Miss Diana Freeman and Mr Kevin Shaw, of the Food Research Laboratory of the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Rescientific and industrial Re-search Organization, North Ryde, Australia. They were examining why some fresh caught shell fish occasionally had "an important off-flavour

Their results published in the journal, Chemistry and Indus-try, describes this component as a distinctive garlic-metallic flavour, and a garlic-like

Identification of the few chemical molecules needed to produce either such a flavour or pungency is, in terms of chemical analyses, more diffi-cult than looking for a needle in a haystack. However, the scientists isolated trimethylarsine, one of the most toxic forms of arsenic. Fortunately it was found in the head part of the creatures, which is discarded before eating or proces-

The study of the seed-esting beetle, which is found in most parts of the world, is reported in the current issue Scientific American. One of its favourite foods is the seed of a vine-like agne. The beetle is the only insect predator because Canavanine kills all the others. But the description by Dr Gerald Rosenthal, professor of biology and toxiology at Kentucker Livingston was this cky University, uses this discovery to suggest the way plants, as well as animals, evolve according to the rules of Daywinian fitness.

Insects and other predators have provided the pressure for plants to give up valuable nutrients to make insecticide ds, he says. Camanavine is one of about 250 amino acids, usually the building blocks of living organisms, that are synthesized by plants but not used as the building blocks for protien.

Leading forensic psychiatrist

70. Gibbens was Emeritus himself untiringly to research. Professor of Forensic Psychiatry at the Institute of Psychiatry in London and known both at home and abroad for his criminological and medicologal research. He was undoubtedly the leading academic forensic psychiatrist of his generation. Born on December 28, 1912, at the early ago of 16 Trevor Gibbens decided to become cither a psychotherapist or an educational psychologist. Nevertheless on the advice of both Dr Edward Glover and Sir Cyril Burt he trained as a doctor at Cambridge and St Thomas' Hospital, qualifying in 1939. At the outbreak of war he joined the RAMC and was

The answers were (1) A; (2) B; (3) B; (4) B; (5) B.

The winners will both receive an Atari 600XL computer for their schools, and a personal gift of The Times Atlas of World History.

The eight runners-up are: Roger Terry, Ashfield Comprehensive, Kirkby-in-Ashfield, Notts: Gary Davies, Wallington High for Boys, Wallington, Surrey, Pauline Roberts, Denbigh High School, Denbigh, Clwyd, Wales; Zoe Ellis, Greenbank High School, Southport, Merseyside: Alice Peters, St. Joseph's R.C. Each will receive a Times Atlas.

KATY GLL (12) is hoping to get a micro of her own this Christmas. She enjoys playing games during her visits to the school computer club, but due to the shortage of machines is only able to use the facilities once every three weeks. She hopes that the Atari prize will available, and uses them as a teaching aid in such subjects as economics, geography, history, and physics, as well as the more formal computer studies for the O level computer studies. The latest project on hand is the use of LOGO, which is proving popular with all the users.

JOHN BIRKETT (15) is finding his O levels computer studies comparatively easy, and after school uses his own BBC micro on which he is writing educational software. His latest is to help young children with multiplication tables and is by Roger Woolnough When a business has been in existence for more than 250 years, it would be no surprise if it had become a little set in its ways. That is not the case with Drivers Jonas, a London-based practice of chartered surveyors.

Not only was it one of the first to apply computers to property management: it has expanded their use from its own business so as to provide computing services to a range of clients. Now it is considering the next step - packaged software related to property management, designed to run on microcomputers.

1725, but it has moved with the "We provide a consultancy for all aspects of commercial urban real estate." explains managing partner Christopher the founders of the business.

These activities cover valuation, through to buying portfolios of properties for investors. They include the manage-ment of the properties, rent collection, repairs and maintenance, refurbishment of buildings, and planning and develop-

It was Christopher Jonas who steered the business into computing. In 1975 he spent a year and became involved for the first time in using an on-line computer system. "The fees to computer system. the school would have been more than repaid by the computer time I was using while I was there." he admits.

When he returned to Drivers Jonas in 1976, he persuaded the other partners that the business must have its own computer system in-house.

"The were willing to follow along in good faith," Jonas says, "without knowing what we would do with the computer once we had it. Other firms thought we must be crazy."

Drivers Jonas was one of the first two property businesses to install a computer system, initially for its own use. Then in 1979 it became clear there was outside demand for computing services related to property. Drivers Jonas began to exploit these opportunities.

It had based its computer activities on the belief that to develop a good system it was necessary to understand the needs of the application, rather than to start with an understanding of computers. Says Jonas: "Our basic principle is that we should be good at supplying systems to the prop-crty market, because we under-That will broaden the market."

Drivers Jonas now has a systems department which does nothing but develop computer applications, from the basic concepts right through to the physical design and mainten-ance of installations on clients' premises. There are 16 people involved full-time. Some are chartered surveyors (the main discipline within the business), while others have a computing background.

Drivers Jonas has no plans to leave the world it knows well. "Our strategic development is aimed at limiting ourselves to the property market," Christopher Jonas says.

Will this restrict growth? Jonas thinks not. "So far we have specialized in large systems, 500 properties and upwards - some run into thousands. But we are also working on a Drivers Jonas standard for the property market, which would run on a small machine.

The exiles of Silicon Valley

In the branch of computer science known as artificial intelligence (AI), there is a missing generation" of British researchers. "That generation the kind of people who would be project leaders, goal shapers, technical managers - is in the United States now, says Professor Edward Feigenbaum of Stanford University, California, one of the pioneers of practical AI systems. Within a radius of only a few miles from Stanford, there is a concentration of Al activity and talent that exceeds that of the entire United Kingdom. Wellestablished centres such as Stanford, SRI International (formerly Stanford Research Institute) and Xerox Palo Alto Research Centre; new Al companies such as Teknowledge; new groups in established electronics companies such as Fairchild and Hewlett-Packard Individually, these teams are making significant advances in Al research and development. Collectively, they breathe synergy into their esoteric disciplines. It is not surprising that some of Britain's missing generation are to be found here in Silicon Valley.

They include Dr Harry

Nothing's adding up for the professor

By C S Sharma

One aspect of the microchip revolution which has not been systematically studied is its side effect on the numeracy of the the nation. It is no longer needed to remember addition and multiplication tables: all that is necessary is to be able to use a calculator or computer.

To those who have found numbers difficult, the microchip has brought a new freedom: it is now not neces to master arithmetic and a lack of numeracy can no longer be recarded as a handican.

Anyone who can type or use a keyboard and is able to comprehend a few simple instructions will be able to do not only accounts but all kinds of complicated effculations. All this is well known. Nevertheless, the microchip brings a with itself as can be seen by looking at some of the side

I think if the phenomenon is not understood and controlled, it will in due course make almost the entire population innumerate. Perhaps it will be easier to see what I am getting at if I narrate accounts of some mathematics teachers. They were discussing a problem thrown up by the microchip. Children are no longer expected to remember addition and

To get the answer 14 one bad to press the keys in following sequence:

In the case of this particular building society the senior staff have cleary failed in devising such a system and clearly have been paid enormous sums (at the expense of members like me) for nothing. The stories I have told so far, disturbing as they may be, are still experiences of one individual and it is dangerous to generalize from isolated particular cases. However, the Sunday Times of January 24 last year published the following: Nearly half the British adult population cannot understand a railway timetable. one in three cannot divide 65 by one in three cannot divide 63 by 5 and three in ten cannot handle simple multiplication or subtraction. These are results of the first-ever survey of adult numeracy published this week. It concludes that 30 per cant of the country is suffering from "arithmophobia" or fear of numbers. The survey of 3,000 adults was conducted by Brigid Sowell of Reading University."

I believe a collapse of numeracy is now happening and no steps are being taken to control it. If it is allowed to continue, the percentage of innumerate persons in our population will increase from about 50 to nearly 100 and in time the ability to add and multiply numbers without the bein of computers will be rare. • The author is professor of

Surprises in thes land of programs

A heartening message for programmers was broadcast at a recent conference: there is still plenty of work to be done and the age of the programmer is far from over. There was, however, a cavear you may be surprised. which machine you are programming.

Users of personal computers in business who do not have a professional computer background are as resistant today to the idea of programming as they ever were.

It seems that they are quite happy to load their data into a pre-written package and let the package get on with it, but the thought of tackling an application in any one of languages currently available Instead, it seems, more and more packages must be offered to get these users to unlock the benefits of information technology. That is where the programmer comes back into the scene they will be writing the prokages. It seems however, that the packages to run on personal computers will not be so different from those on much ligger machines.

IBM has recently bridged part of the gar between the small and the big ends of the computer power range by launching a personal computer that runs one of the main operating systems used until now only on its mainframe

This raises the prospect of taking whole applications and applications packages from the big machines and running them on the successors to today's

Ian Sharp, founder of I. P. Sharp Associates, told the Computing Workshop that a personal computer on a desk in two years time would have the same power as a big mainframe computer in IBM's current line today.

There is no need to worry about personal computers being too small to run these big pre written packages originally designed for mainframes because they will soon have the Sharp's company took this route when developing its international computer network through which it delivers software and programming time to its customers. It took a personal computer and wrote the code to make it run like an IBM mainframe.

It ran slowly but then. Sharp argued, the one thing we can be sure of in the computer industry is that the hardware will run faster and faster for quite some

The prospect is, then, that far from being liberated from the grind of writing applications for IBM computers, a host of programmers will be locked into that function for a long

Wired up for quicker bills

A number of electricity boards throughout the country are looking at ways of using improve their efficiency. Among these, the South Western Electricity Board (SWEB) has decided to use portable billing machines to produce bills for their quarterly billed consumers. This follows a similar scheme undertaken by the South of Scotland Board (SSEB), and a successful trial scheme carried out recently by SWEB in Exeter.

The new system is largely based on a hardware and software package developed by Immediate Business Systems of Milton Keynes, a fairly new company that started out as an offshoot of Plessey.

Their main product line is based on the use of "rugged" portable microcomputers, designed to be used in what would normally be considered (in computing terms) difficult conditions. Thus the small microcomputer that forms the heart of designed to be carried by the Board's meter readers as they carry out their daily tasks.

This machine is the PBM 500 and it contains a remarkable amount of processing power for a portable machine that is smaller than most attache cases. As well as a Z80 microprocessor with up to 16K of RAM. it also contains a small keyboard, a 16 character display, up to 64K of bubble memory and a printer capable of printing both normal characters and OCR characters.

By using these machines, SWEB's meter readers can both read a consumer's meter and print an electricity bill at the same time. To achieve this, SWEB have had to reorganize the way in which they go about their meter reading activities.

For many years, all custon details have been held on the board's main IBM computer in Plymouth. Included in the information for each cus are such things as the cus tomer's previous meter reading details of where their meter is located and even warnings to the meter reader - "Beware of the processed by a minicomp an FS2000, largely based on PDP hardware; the information received from the central com-puter is stored for various sorts of local processing, and then the FS2000 is used to load information relating to "today's" consumers into a number of the portable PBM 500 computers. These computers are then carried by the meter readers as

As he visits each customer the meter reader enters the current meter reading. From the information stored internally, the computer then checks this reading for possible errors, calculates the consumer's bill and prints it there and then. It also stores details of this bill in its internal bubble memory. At the end of the day, all the portable computers are returned to the district office. There they are again connected to the FS2000 computer, which reads details of all the day's bills.

The results so far are encouraging, both at SWEB and at SSEB. They both see advantages not only in speed but in saving on postal costs.

EXPANSION

During the past two years CSA Ltd has established itself as a specialist System consultancy and implementation company, committed to providing a high quality service based upon the skill areas and disciplines listed above.

Our sphere of operation is W. Europe. Our clients include such well known names as Bell Telephone, Fisons-Boots, Marconi, Plessey, Siemens and Signaal.

Coincident with a substantial growth in demand for our services we are now planning a broad-front, general expansion to commence this Autumn from new offices in Woking.

We are a young company growing fast; but with a definite policy that human values will not be allowed to fall victim to corporate growth. Ours is a 'people' industry, so people and esprit-de-corps are very much 'first' in our scheme of operation. We firmly believe that size is no substitute for motivation - without which there can be no excellence. And excellence is what CSA is all about.

Where Citicorp leads, other banks will follow

Citicorp, the second biggest American bank, has agreed to acquire the whole of Vickers da Costa (Holdings), bar the 60.1 per cent it is not allowed to own in the subsidiary which is a broker member of the London Stock Exchange.

The agreed sum is £20m but the takeover is subject to the permission of the Bank of England and the Stock Exchange, and the agreement of the Vickers staff and eight major institutions which own a third of the Vickers parent

Citicorp also has an option to acquire the outstanding 60.1 per cent of Vickers da Costa Ltd, the stock exchange member company, should the Stock Exchange Council allow total foreign ownership, "which we (Citicorp) don't envisage for many years to come".

Although there have been many outside interests buying into member firms, Vickers is the first broker to reach agreement with a major institution since the Stock Exchange began restructuring trading practices. A large number of British and foreign institutions have been vying to buy into brokers to take advantage of the new climate of competition once fixed commisions are phased out.

Vickers made its name with overseas trading expertise, having offices in Hongkong, Tokyo, New York and Singapore. It has a staff of 380 and a turnover of more than £1bn a year producing commission income of around £3.5m, It ranks among the top 25 broker firms.

Vickers has 1,850,000 shares in issue of which 625,000 are owned by institutions that include the Prudential, the Post Office Pension Fund, Electra House, the ICFC, Murray Johnstone and several Oxford colleges. The remainder are owned by the staff.

Sir Kenneth Berrill, chairman of Vickers, said: "Obviously Citicorp wanted 100 per cent of the lot. But the agreement is a good one for us. In a few years trading will get to be very competitive indeed and single-member firms like us will get

He added that the capital and backing will enable the firm to begin recruiting a much larger, stronger staff, particulalrly analysts. It will also help in competing more effectively in terms of stock market trading and investment services offered to

Citicorp, similarly said it was attracted for the ability to develop an investment banking business with Vickers as an integral part. "We did not feel that we needed to buy one of the bigger firms to develop à significant business. Vickers ranks twenty-third in the institutional business league. This partnership will give it the muscle to pull in the salesmen and analysts needed to climb the

Schroder loses out to Morgan Grenfell

No dust is safe from a new broom. Any lingering doubt that P&O is under new management was dispelled yesterday morning when Mr Jeffrey Sterling, who became chairman a week ago, met the Earl of Airlie and Mr Geoffrey Williams to tellthem that P&O had decided to change its merchant bank. In future, P&O's advisers will be Morgan Grenfell, not Schroder Wagg. The meeting was painful and the shock to the venerable Schroder system, acute.

Mr Sterling, who was given the chair vacated by the Earl of Inchepe to save P&O from Trafalgar House and Mr Nigel Broackes, is working on the assumptions that the Monopolies Commission will not stand in the way of Trafalgar's bidding for P&O and that the Trafalgar board will then come forward with a fresh offer. Having succeeded in his defence, Mr Sterling would then concentrate on reshaping and leading a revitalized P&Ointo the next decade.

Being the kind of man he is, he needs people around him - directors, managers and professional advisers - "in tune with my style". His "style" is closely related to "success" and quite frankly Schro der is not the first merchant bank that springs to mind if you are fighting for your corporate life. Mr Sterling might have chosen S. G. Warburg but, to be frank again, Morgan Grenfell presently has the edge over the original masters of the takeover art.

True, in the shape of Blaise Hardman, Morgan Grenfell has a man inside the P&O boardroom, but the bank's performance in the field, notably BTR's acquisition of Thomas Tilling, speaks volumes for its professional skills and personal

He relishes the challenge at P&O but events in his first week have not left his soul untouched. More than the dropping of Schroder Wagg, the replacement of the heads of the cargo division upset his personal equilibrium.

Donald Regan in never-never land

In any other context than next year's presidential election, Mr Donald Regan's breakfast briefing yesterday might have been astonishing news for markets and finance ministers round the world. The US budget deficit, he said, could dip as low as $125 billion in 1985. If credence could be given to Mr Regan's remarks, the markets would mark down interest rates straight away and there could be dancing in the streets all the way from Sao Paolo to Giasgow, where CBI members are worrying about what will become of recovery next year unless the cost of money falls, Instead, the dollar is rising again.

If anything, Mr Regan's optimism must be seen as a negative rather than hopeful sign. The US treasury Secretary is trying to counter the opinion poll news that voters rate the high budget deficits as a major

The pre-election tendency to talk away problems is not confined to the US budget deficit. On the eve of his trip to Asia, President Reagan is being urged to pressurize the Japanese into pushing the yen up against the dollar.

Japan is charged with deliberately keeping the yen low against the dollar, to boost exports, by keeping interest rates too low and with restricting the yen's international role to enjoy greater freedom to control domestic policies.

The Japanese may well reply that the yen cannot compete against the again almighty dollar. The world needs Mr Reagan's predictions to come true.

Shop sales set record and industry's costs fall Record spending fires recovery hopes shares.

By Frances Williams, Economics Correspondent

Government hopes for continuing recovery and for a further slowdown of inflation were boosted yesterday by official figures showing a surge in consumer spending in September to record levels and a drop last month in the cost of industry's fuel and raw matcrials. Spending in the shops in September jumped by 4 per cent after falling in August, leaving the volume of retail sales in the third quarter this year 1 per cent higher than in the second quarter and 5.5 per cent above its level a year carlier.

Sptember's performance was a good deal better than provisional figures, based on incomplete returns, had suggested. Part of the explanation may be that the hot August weather (and diversion of cash into record car sales) encousaged people to postpone purchases upsetting the usual seasonal pattern allowed for by the statistics. The survey of the distributive trades recently introduced by the Confederation of British Industry suggests that retailers expect consumer demand to command humant in the remain burnant in the remain to remain buoyant in the run up to But economists are split on whether the spending spree will maintain its momentum next vear. Many analysts believe it of industry's basic materials fell will diminish as consumers refrain from going deeper into debt, after the sharp rise in borrowing in recent years. Others see no sign of this. At the end of September the

John Waddington may be famous for its Monopoly and Cluedo games but it now earns sizable profits from plastic cartons and security printing. It is these operations which are propelling Waddington towards the profit forecast made during the bid battle with Mr Robert

It was a major order from Unilever for plastic products which made three institutional shareholders change their minds two months ago and saved Waddington from the clutches of Mr Maxwell's British Printing and Communications Corporation which at that time was bidding £18m. Some of the work from that contract is in the current halfyear figures. Bu the full benefit will show through next year. As part of its bid defence. Waddington said it would produce £3m pretax profit for the year to next March and pay a record 15p a share total dividend.

Those figures were forecast after Waddington knew the results for the first six months to October 1. Waddington obliged yesterday by revealing a significant turnround in profitability on a minimal increase in Turnover rose 5 per cent to £25.1m while losses of £271.000 were turned into £1.6m profits. The 7.5p net interim dividend is twice covered by retained earnings. And the management says the group is on target to meet its forecast. Waddington shares jumped 12p to 285p on the results. The ABF's baking business -mainly under the Sunblest banner - is still suffering from the intense price war and slim well-timed sale of its South African interests for £200m has margins but remains profitable.

The milling operation suffers changed the shape of the baking from similar problems, though

ABF intends to review prices before Christmas.

Neither division is likely to increase its full-year profits over last time's figures of £6m and £17m for baking and milling respectively, but the overally interested. picture is more encouraging Last year's heavy rationaliza costs of £8m should be about halved.
Volume growth in the retail business - principally the Fine Fare supermarkets chain - is slowing in common with the industry trend. However, the opening last month of three superstores in time for the busy Christmas period should help sales.

City estimates of profits of £130m this year against last time's £146.5m look over-optimistic. The City has not considered fully the impli-cations of the South African disposal and its effect at the pretax level. But attributable profits should rise substantially.

An interim dividend of 1.6p per Ordinary share (1982-1.5p) will be paid on 5 March 1984 to shareholders registered at the close of business on 3 February 1984. Including tax credits this dividend is equivalent to 2.29p per share (1982-2.14p). The dividend is being paid on the increased share capital following the 1 for 10 capitalisation issue of new shares and represents an increase of 17.3 per cent. compared with last year.

The Chairman, Mr. GARRY WESTON, reports:

As announced on 30 June 1983 our 52 per cent interest in the Premier Group Limited of South Africa was sold for 351 million rands. The results for Premier have been excluded from the turnover and group profit shown above, and these figures together with the comparative amounts relate to the continuing operations of Worldwide sales increased by £114 million or 10 per cent. The trading surplus at £37.6 million was maintained at the high level achieved last year. The strong cash flow has enabled the group to contain borrowings and with only a marginal increase in interest charges, the group profit is £34.6 million.

The profits of the Premier Group are included for three months only to the date of sale of this company compared with six months for the previous year. The proceeds from the sale of this company have been invested and this accounts for the substantial increase in investment income to £7.9 million.

Although the combined pre-tax profit at £54.9 million is £3.9 million lower than for the comparable period last year, the profit attributable to the company at £33.5 million is £2.8 million or 9 per cent higher. This is principally due to the reduction in the minority interests in the profits of the group following the sale of Premier. The earnings per ordinary share have been calculated on the new share capital and the comparative figures adjusted accordingly, and the earnings per share for the half year at 8.4p represent an increase of 9 per cent compared with a similar period last year.

In the United Kingdom sales increased overall by 8 per cent with a 12 per cent increase being achieved by

In the United Kingdom sales increased overall by 8 per cent with a 12 per cent increase being achieved by our retailing division, offset by a reduction in ternover of our grain merchanting companies, and also reflecting little movement in price levels in the majority of our manufacturing divisions. Profits in the United Kingdom at £24.7 million compare with £23.9 million for a similar period last year, and while increases were achieved by the retailing divisions, and there was some improvement in the profitability of the other manufacturing divisions. profits in the baking division were lower due to the incidence in the period of public holidays and the continuing

Sales of our overseas divisions increased by 15 per cent, but profits at £9.9 million were 10.6 million lower In Australia the results for the half year in terms of local currency were down by 15 per cent, reflecting the continuing losses from the New South Wales bread operation, due to the price control in that State, coupled with the downturn in the poultry division's results, which were adversely affected by high grain prices as an aftermath respectively.

Australian and South African results have been converted at L67 dollars and L68 rands to the £

Although our major milling and baking divisions are unlikely to achieve increased earnings for the year due to increased costs and heavy competition, trading profits for the group are traditionally higher in the second half. Following a period of high expenditure on rationalisation in the group's other manufacturing divisions, there are now some indications of an improvement in their results, and this should continue. The United Proceedings of the property and the are continued to provide a state of the property and the are continued to provide a state of the provided provincing about Kingdom retailing divisions have made a satisfactory start to the year, and we are cautiously op their results for the full year.

The changes which have taken place in the structure of the group will be dealt with fully in the annual report and accounts, and the profit on the sale of Premier, which exceeds £100 million, will be added to extraordinary items in the profits and loss account for the year.

How Sainsbury's pulled off a skilful balancing act

If the best form of advertising is word of mouth, it might be thought that J. Sainsbury need never invest in another news-paper advertisement or TV commercial. Britain's leading food retailer has such a high reputation for quality and value that its most vocal salesmen are

3RIEF

The opening today of its supermarket on the site of the old West London air terminal in Cromwell Road - prime Sainsbury's territory, with thou-sands of upmarket ABCI shoppers within a car ride - has been eagerly awaited locally in a way that no other retailer. except Marks and Spencer.

could hope for.
Such popularity is reflected in the Sainsbury accounts over the past five years.

Profits are up by 220 per cent since 1978, from £31.8m to £101.5m last year, while net profit margins in that time have grown from 3.16 per cent to 4.43. In the same period, sales have grown from £1,007m to £2,293m, customer numbers have risen by 43 per cent to more than 5 million a week, and Sainsbury's share of the grocery market has grown from 10.4 per cent to 15 per cent, putting it abead of Tesco for the first

Viewed from the vantage point of 1983, this growth has an air of inevitability about it. as if taking the quality route was bound to pay dividends. Yet in the inflationary mid-70s, when Tesco launched its Checkout campaign and triggered off the supermarket price war, such an approach might have looked risky.

The fact that Sainsbury in that five-year period has pulled off a skilful balancing act between the need for low prices and the maintenance of quality was recognised last week by the Institute of Marketing which perceived by customers to be gave it the 1983 National even wider.

Marketing Award. In its submission to the Institute, the company points out how easy it would have been to over-react to the immediate price threat.

Our two major compétitors during this period were Tesco and Asda, both of which initiated very heavy promotional activity and fierce compe-tition. Sainsbury's were not panicked into uncharacteristic responses but maintained a steady consistent marketing position - high quality at the most competitive price.

"This consistency was undoubtedly a major strength. Tesco gained considerable market share in their first years of Checkout; as the message of the Discount programme and the quality image came through in-store and in advertising Sainsbury's improved their market share (as measured by AGB) by 44 per cent, as against Tesco's 13 per cent and Asda's per cent. The Discount programme was Sainsbury's immediate response to the price problem. Not only had the price gap widened between Sainsbury and its main competitors, but it was newspaper advertisements though still featuring products and prices - became more

Magazine advertising, however, provided the main thrust of this new approach as Sainsbury created a new style of food-retailer advertising that has won the company awards and spawned much imitation. Using double-page photo-graphic spreads, and witty copy by one of London's top copywriters, Mr David Abbott, the advertisements convey both the quality and the wide range of produce such as cheese and vegetables that Sainsbury sells. Mr Peter Davis, Sainsbury's assistant managing director, responsible for buying and marketing, says: "The reasons we went into magazines were both logical and emotional. First, while we advertise on television quite heavily and it reaches the majority of our ant group, who are light ITV viewers, not very well covered. able to have time to talk to our customers, and not just shout key points at them. We wanted use rational and logical arguments. An even more important element in Sainsbury's marketness of Sainsbury's price policy. So the following year the company introduced Discount ing activity is its research programme, which plays a 79, which produced similarly fundamental part in every area successful results. By the middle of the company's activity, from of 1979, however, after 18 months of price-dominated advertising, it was felt that other the selection of product lines to the layout of the store and, perhaps most crucial of all, the elements needed to be added to location of the stores themthe advertising image, such as quality, freshness and choice.

When the Government sold half its shares in Cable and Wireless in November, 1981, the prospectus declared explicitly that the Government intended to retain a majority shareholding in the company for the foreseeable future. In fact, its shareholding slipped from fractionally over 50 per cent to 45 per cent in March this year when, without demur from the Treasury, Cable and Wireless made a cash-plusshares acquisition in Hongkong, its largest and mo profitable area of operation.

Any lingering suspicion that this was an accidental or resecable aberration has been dispelled by the latest disposal plans. Treasury has clearly decided. that, in this context at least two years is the limit of the foreseeable future. (Sceptics might wonder how this attitude reflects on the Treasury's position in the more serious debate about long-term trends in public spending, but that is another matter).

Business, which had been through a difficult time, was slowly getting better. Sir Terence said. There had been a further increase in total output this year. Even manufacturing, from a decline in the previous year, had shown continued increases in orders, output and sales from January to October.

This resolution is not an attack

There was not much danger of overheating but a possibility that the economy might run out of steam in the second half of next year - an outcome that the CBI and the Government must do everything to The CBI survey had shown that net job losses in manufacturing would continue for the next few months but at a reduced rate. High on Sir Terence's list of obstacles to more business and prosperity was the excessive share of national resources going to the state, mio spending rather than creating wealth. Any progress in pushing back the frontiers of the state would

Move to end aid rejected

Delegates rejected a motion saying that government financial assistance for industry was both a boon and a bind and on balance we would be better off without it. Mr Ron Lander, managing director of Lander Alarms, said state aid was a form of corruption Over the past five years, industry had received aid in excess of £22b These handouts distorted the market Mr John Risk, secretary of Coats Patons and chairman of the Scottish CBl. said some aid had been superfluous but the net benefit had been substantial.

MARKET REPORT • by Michael Clark

Shares of Distillers, the Export blow at Distillers Scotch whisky group which once dominated the industry, slipped 4p to 226p yesterday after another round of disap-pointing export figures. Although it has been his by some of its smaller rivals on the home front the group has continued to fare relatively well in a number of overseas markets and its Dewar's brand has recently gained top spot in the United States. The group is likely to suffer more than most of its rivals from an 11 per cent decline in September exports and this detailed shipments, there is panies. Epicure was up 1/2p at little prospect of Distillers 38p.

producing cheerful interim figures next month although the companies have reaped rich full year's results may be better than last year's £209.1m.

On the home front Distillers is near to relaunching its second leg of the account Johnnie Walker Red Label started on a firm note although Scotch whisky which was it was left largely to British withdrawn six years ago after a Petroleum on its South China

Stein maintains his faith in Nicholas

Jock Stein became a friend indeed to the needy Chartie Nicholas yesterday. The smile vanished when he was asked if, in that case, Nicholas should have been included, considering the fact that the young man who had been a scoring prodigy with Celtic appeared to have lost his talents adequately rewarded by his club, is also out of pochet for he too is missing from the list. Stein said succincity: "The 18 I have chosen are the best at my command."

It was then that Stein gave a helping hand to the beleaguered Arsenal player, saying of the forward who has yet to score a league goal at Highbury: "Nicholas has tremendous potential. The goals will come from him, of that I am certain. There is no way Scotland will do anything to blunt his hopes."

So again Scotland's changes of So again Scotland's chances of finding goals rest with Nicholas and Dalglish, a partnership which has so far shown only a few glimpses of the brilliance which should have been forthcoming from two attackers of such rare talent.

While selection for his country was a boost to Nicholas, what may give him more energy is the fact that Archibald, of Tottenham Hotspur, has returned, ready to show that he can score goals for his country as well as for his club. Archibald's impressive form recently has induced Stein to bring him back and induced Stein to bring him back and he will prove a prenacing shadow for Nicholas.

UEFA look into Inter 'bribe'

Berne (Reuter) - The European Football Union (UEFA) has ordered an investigation into an alleged attempt to bribe Hans Berger, trainer of the Dutch clab Groningen to lose a match.

UEFA said they had received a telephone call from the Dutch Football Association informing them of attempted bribery before the UEFA Company of th the UEFA Cup second second leg between Inter Milan of Italy and Groningen in Bari on November 2. UEFA said they had asked Groningen to send it all available evidence by the evening of November 9.

Renze de Vries, chairman of Groningen, said an unidentified man had offered Berger £57,000 to make sure Groningen lost the second round tie, but Berger had refused the offer. Milan won the natch 5-1 after losing the first leg 2-0 to go through to the third on aggregate 5-3

Last time around for Broome and Philco

By Jenny MacArthur

Broome's farm in his retirement where, according his rider, "he will be thoroughly spoilt". Broome is one of 22 top British riders and 15 foreign riders invited to compete for £62,330 prize-money at what has become Britain's most popular indoor show. Seventy per cent of the tickets are already sold – a far cry from its inaugural year in 1972 when tickets had to be given away in their thousands. their thousands.

The show owes its popularity to its special family atmosphere -

David Broome will ride his famous parmer, Philco, for the last time at this year's Olympia International Show Jumping championships which run from December 15-19 in the Grand Hall.

The American-bred Philco, now 16 has provided Broome with some of the best wins of his career including the George V Gold Cup iv 1977 and the World Team championships the following year. ### Streatham power burns out Rockets Streatham Redskins play in reply from the start of the second Kirkaldy next Saturday, Edinburgh next Sunday and Solihull, in the English final of the Autumn Cup, next Tuesday. As they slog their way through their 10,000 miles of away through their 10,000 miles of away through their season they can conselve the season the seas trips this season, they can console themselves with the thought that the 40-game schedule may be their most effective ally in their attempt to take the British championship away from the Dundee Rockets.

The Rockets are not built to withstand the kind of exacting weekend to which they have just been subjected: two hard games at Murrayfield on Saturday and away to Streatham on Sunday. They clinched the Scottish section of the Autumn Cup with their 10-7 win over the Edinburgh club, but then went down 11-4 in South London, their heaviest defeat since they were re-formed just over two years ago. Taking short, quick shifts and working conscientiously, Streatharn

"What we were working on was moving the puck forward, dumping it and tiring them," John Rost, the Streatham coach, explained. "They were short-handed and we capita-ized on that."

Dundee had lost the use of Brinster after a fracas the previous night, when the powerful defenceman was sent off together with Murrayfield's newly-signed Canadian. Bill Sobkowich. For once, Dundee's attempts to patch over their stratched prepures failed as their stretched resources failed, as first Walker, then Kinmond and finally Pennycook were tried out at left defence, where Goldstone had tormented McGuff for half the Nottingham were surprised their turn, going down 5-4 in Southampton, where a Brian Sims goal 63 seconds from the end of the second period proved to be a winner. Some jockeys do not find it easy beginning a new career after much of a lifetime spent race riding. Not so Philip Blacker, aged 34, who retired a year ago (Michael Phillips writes). He promptly turned his band to scalpture full time and Both men and women will take part in a super-giant, a special slatom and a giant station in this North Italian valley. Valtelling, which will host the 1985 world championships. "It will be a rehearsal for the forthcoming World Cup and for the Olympic Games," (November 10 to 22).

Priced between £850 and £4.500, many of them have links with his past, such as the one above entitled "The Water Jump". The seeds of his new interest were sown about eight years ago when he met Margot Dent, a sculptress who had a horse in training with Ron Vibert, for whom he was riding at the time. To date Blacker has sold just over 100 bronzes. His exhibition prises his most recent pieces of work number 20 in all.

During a riding career that spanned 14 seasons Blacker rode 327 winners under National Hunt rules. The Triumph Hurdle and the Waterford Crystal Stayers Hurdle, both run at the National Hunt meeting at Cheltenham, and the Whithread Gold Cup at Sandown Park were the best races he won: Royal Mail. Pollerdstown and Royal Ralief the best horses he rode.

What one yearns to see, owever, is an English side playing with a sense of responsibility against them, and that implies the sense to use all the ability latent in their side, not half of it. The North played heroically against the All Blacks for half an hour but seemed to fall between two stools, uncertain whether to play completely to their forwards or to involve their midfield. New Zealanders at Bristol on November 15, the penultimate match of their tour.

Scott, spect 29, and with 27 England appearances to his credit, is overlooked in favour of Teague, the Gloucester back row forward, who achieves a double leapfrog over the former England captain and his official reserve last season, Hesford It is a side which, broadly speaking, combines the spatide of the Bath backs with the solidity of the Gloucester forwards. The divisional selectors have gambled in their back row by playing Hall, a developing No 6 for Bath, on the open side flank. He is highly rated in the West Country but he is in the same position as Gadd of Gloucester, who must be very close to the same position as using of Gioneester, who must be very close to the senior England position and understandably the temptation to have them both in the same side has proved too much.

Score's side from the position of sading contender for the 1983 Lions' party, began last season when he struggled to find his best form in the international championship and may not have been helped by the addition to his responsibilities of the captaincy for England's last two matches.

This season he seems to have los much of his appetite; he gave a lacklustre display in the divisional warm up game against Newbridge last week (which the Welsh club won convincingly) and though he is reported to have dominated Richards at the back of the line out Richards at the back of the line out in Cardiff's game with Leicester at the weekend, that did not stop the young Midlander distinguishing himself about the field.

The inclusion of Teague, who is 6 ft 3 ins, leaves the south west short of height at the back of the line-out, but the back of the line-out, line of the line of the

A similar understanding exists behind the scrum where the Bath back division, plus Mogg, will be served by Harding, the only Bristol player in the side. New role for Michael Bonallack at St Andrews

Keeping the Rand A out of the rough with smooth organization

Micael Bonallack, who has taken over from Keith Mackenzie as secretary of the Royal and Ancient, could have spread his papers over a long and gleaming antique table and another table besides. Instead, he had every-thing he needed tacked sparsely in front of him; he felt

As in his last job as chairman of a leisure company concernes with property development around golf courses, Bonallack sees organization and the ability to relate to people as all-important in his new role.

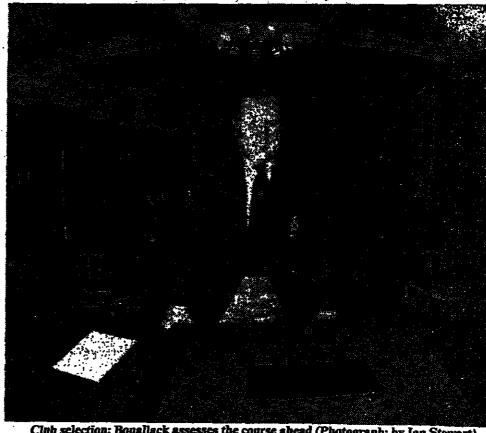

"I do the same job for members as any other club secretary," he says. "The only difference is that there are certain problems attached to being the secretary of a club that doesn't have its own course..."

The R and A's playing rights over the links in St Andrews are slightly better than those of the town's other clubs, but the Links Trust Act is due to expire at the end of next year. There is currently a deal of talk as to who should get what under any new agreement, although one doubts whether the housewives concerned about reestablishing their ancient rights to bleach washing over the fairways of the Old Course. In his days as a member of the R ans A. Bonnalack served of various Open championship committee. However, it is only now that he has begun to appreciate the full scale of the Open operation.

At a time when this year's Open at Birkdale was still fresh in the players' minds, Bonna-lack and Mackenzie headed for the United States PGA championship to contact those wishing to play at St Andrews in 1984. "The response was incredible." Bonnalack said in wonder. "almost all the exempt players insisted they would be coming and, no doubt because of the venue, there were plenty of others happily promising to turn up for the pre-qualifying."

green at the Road Hole when David Marsh virtually decided the outcome with a glorious three-iron struck to within 12 feet of the flag. Marsh went on to defeat Bill Byndman by one hole, but for Bonaliack that seventeenth had been a disaster. All square with Vinny Giles in the first singles series, he seemed in good shape as the American's third finished on the road. As it was, Giles made a winning four, his ball going into the hole via the flagstick with a crash that echoes still through Bonallack's cars. Had the ball missed, it would without doubt have been swallowed up by the Road-bunker. Bonallack then failed with his putt from five feet and lost the match at the last.

The R&A's new secretary does not believe the international golf conference to be staged in St Andrews in 1985 will do anything to take the professional. He appreciates that the present system in which amateurs win vouchers may be open to abuse but is convinced that cash prizes would lead to nothing but trouble: "They would not be so bad for scratch events, but just imagine what might happen where handicaps were involved. The temptation for people to hang on to handicaps that were too high would be enormous." During an amateur career in which he won five Amateur championships and five English titles, Bonallack never considered playing as a pro-fessional "What I admire so much about the Watsons of this world is the way in which they are able to play close to their best all the time. I used to find it hard work aiming my game at three or maybe four championships a year."

Since arriving in St Andrews in June, Bonellack has had no amateur game closer to the more than five rounds of golf.

long just about the most lethal "holer-out in amateur golf, he now finds himself feeling no more sanguine than the next man over a three-footer.

His wife, Angela, has fared rather better over the past five months. The former English champion and Curtis Cup player headed north not knowing how she would react to her new environment. Now she aiready has in all her cards for 1984 and is back down to a two handicp.

The Banallacks do not find it incomfortably quiet at their new home on the slopes of the Blebo Craigs, "Our old house in Essex," Bonallack explained, was also in the country. The only difference was that where, from that bit of country, it used to take me an hour and threequarers to get to work, it now takes no more than ten minutes."

Rhodes, the chairman of Ovaltine Hemel Hempstead, was angry at having to part with £1,000 to his opposite number. Dennis Roach of Kingscraft Kingston, on the orders of the English Basketball Association. The English Basketball Association. Maguire, the forward Hemel have signed from Falkirk, would not have been able to play in Saturday's 114-80 win against kingston. Rhodes felt Falkirk should have been ordered to pay the money, which is the outstanding amount owed to Kingston for the transfer of Maguire who left them for Falkirk at the beginning of last season only to move south to Hemel before this season began.

The EBBA had insisted that Magnire could not play until the fee was paid and those orders were upheld by the game's commissioner. Harry Errington, who witnessed the

as they had no jurisdiction over Falkirk, it was up to the Scottish Basketball Association; but the SBA's technical director, Kenny Johnston, said: "We feel we are under no obligation to extort the

Mr Johnston explained that after the transfer fee of £500 was agreed upon in arbitration by English and Scotish representatives, Mel Welch, the EBBA's administrator, added on an extra £1,000 because Kingston could have received substantially more for Maguire had he moved to smother English chub. Mr Johnston chester $3-81 with Xavier, their chester $3-81 with Xavier, their says that heither he nor Falkirk were informed of this until after Maguire the last second. Rod Lee Camp, had departed for Hemel. "It is a their American, purchased from ballas Mavericks for $1,000, proved matter was resolved," ne said, "we would not allow that."

Mr Welch agreed that he had asked the arbitrators to reconsider the fee because Maguire would have been a "more valuable commodity. in December but were not received.

The subsequent performance of Hemel, in which Magnire collected 11 points, must have made Rhodes feel like a man who has been burgled only to win the pools; Kingston – fresh from a recent double over the league champions, Crystal Palace, and a cup victory over the current league leaders. Crystal Palace, and a cup victory over the current league leaders. Bracknell – seemed to be heading for another success when they took a seven-point lead midway through the first half. It was then that Hemel found the form that has deserted them for so long. S Smith, their new American guard, being the revelation.

Harry Errington, who witnessed the transaction 10 minutes before the start.

"The EBBA have chickened out." Rhodes said. "They should have made Falkirk pay but they were not prepared too. I am terribly disappointed with the EBBA. They have divorced themselves from what's going on and that goes from the top down. They say they will talk to Falkirk but what I am supposed to do in the meantime, send Maguire to Grenada on holiday?"

The EBBA claimed yesterday that as they had no jurisdiction over extending their lead in the League, sponsored by Wimpey Homes, to four points at the expense of Bolton, the bottom club, who are releasing Crosby, one of their Americans.

Crosby, one of their Americans. Sunderland, beaten by Sarajevo in the European Cup, maintained their challenge by defeating Brighton 81-72, Wearren scoring 30 points. Cunningham replied with 38 for Brighton but Jenkins, his American colleague, managed only guard, scoring the winning basket in the last second. Rod Lee Camp,

set to go through

Speedwell Rucanor, of Bristo, have their best chance of getting through to the second round of the European Cup next Saturday, when they play the Austrians, CA Tyrolia,

The opportunity is there thanks to a fine display in Vienna at the weekend, when they went down 3-2 (15-9, 13-15, 11-15, 15-6, 15-(15-9, 13-15, 11-15, 15-6, 1510). Last year, in the corresponding round, Speedwell took a set from Servette, of Geneva, in the away tie, then won the return 3-2. It was not enough to put them through, but their position against the Austrians is better and they are confident they can go through on Sainrday in Bath.

They made up ground on Airdrie, who dropped their first set of the season, beating Dundee Kirkton 3-1. Airdrie play West Coast next Saturday, at Airdrie, and these two are MIM's biggest rivals.

means questioning the authority of the Pope. The play, covering the ten-year period of Luther's quest for salvation, manages to capture convincingly the turnoil of the times and, thanks to Pryce, to convey the effect of one man's conscience on a country. Maurice Denham gives a splendid performance as Staupitz, Luther's Augustinian superior, as does Clive Switt as the hell-fire preacher and seller of induigences, John Tetzel.

Continued from page 1 closing in on Arafat, is evi dently anxious to bring the battle to a conclusion Arafat himself now spends much of his time in a new PLO headquarters on a narrow street in the old part of Tripoli. He conceded yesterday that con-ditions in Baddawi - where his men were still firing salvoes of Katyusha rockets at Syrian and ınti-Arafat Palestinian postions in the mountains to the east - were "very tough". His guerrillas appeared to be about to take over Tripoli as a bastion for their own defence, much as they defenced west Beirut against the Israeli Army last year, Mr Arafat said as much yesterday claiming that the Syrians "have made a decision to attack the city". Colonel Abu Moussa, the military commander of the anti-Arafat Palestinians, has said hat he would like Mr Arafat to 'return" to the PLO movemen and there are still rumours in ripoli that he might be given ale passage out of Lebanon and arough Syria to go back to his riginal base in Tunis, albeit in isgrace.

A curious report in the city lys that it was Colonel Rifaet -Assad, the Syrian President's rother, who flew Mr Arafat nto Lebanon in September. ertainly, Mr Arafat always fers to Rifaat el-Assad as "my ciend", althoug hee still accuses he President of setting the Palestinian dissidents against

Israel places Army on alert

Jerusalem - The Israeli Army was placed on special alert day after the announcement of the Syrian mobilisation (Christopher Walker writes). By what the Israelis described ally as "a coincidence" the lyrian move came within hours of a planned Israeli exercise to mobilize thousands of its reservists and an unspecified number of vehicles to test new call-up procedures. A spokes-men said that most of those reporting would be released mmediately on arrival.

The Army emphasized that the Israeli exercise had been planned for some time. It would "very soon". Senior defence sources took pains to insist that Israel had no

A most disturbing case. measure which caused 2 certain amount of concern, some of it genuine, in the last Parliament before the Bill lapsed with the calling of the general election. For us in the gallery, it was an occasion for strong nerves. Labour memcivilization, an extraordinary feat given his party. bers are apt, in connexion with this measure, to protest with relish about "intimate searches" of suspects and related subjects, and to offer details. Mr Gerald Kaufman, the new chief Opposition spokes-man on home affairs, himself carried out an intimate search on Mr Leon Brittan, the Home Secretary, Mr Kaufman search of concealed weapons. Mr Kaufman made a great impression on Labour back impression on Labour back benchers when, as chief Opposition spokesmen on the environment, he used to do this sort of thing to Mr Michael Heseltine. Mr Kaufman likes reading detail. Most politicians like neither reading nor detail.

But society expects one to do such work. So Mr Kaufman was voted by his backbench colleagues to the the suspect Mr Brittan. It was an example of the way in which the system is open to

A suspiciously dry manner

Mr Brittan is basically an ordinary, law-abiding Con-servative wet. Originally, he found employment as a libel lawyer. But, in an effort to better himself and find more productive work, he drifted into the Westmister area. Under Thatcherism jobs for such people in that part of London such are scarce. He was forced to behave in a suspiciously dry manner. It was that that drew him to the attention of Mr Kaufman Mr Kaufman got hold of him roughly by his "clause 22, sub clause 3DC". That seemed to extend police powers to stop people. Mr Kaufman demanded greater clarifi-cation. Mr Brittan did his best to keep his dignity while the clauses. The Home Secretary remained silent, giving the impression that he had never

As well as his taste for detail, Mr Kaufman also has a taste for exaggeration and extravagant suggestion. Those he manages to indulge while at the same time remaining in the absolute centre of his party

Thus he yesterday said that Mr Brittan had been "apprehended in the felonious act of trying to slip a bogus police and criminal evidence Bill through Parliament", and that accused man, Brittan, tried to avoid the charge by grassing on his accomplice, the old lag Whitelaw". Furthermore in a dazzling change of metaphor from the penal to the ideological, he accused Mr Brittan of a "somewhat Stalinist attempt to rewrite

Shabby raincoat clue to offence

A few minutes later, Mr Kaufman had discovered that the Bill gave a policeman a top of the Shadow Cabinet.
Yesterday Mr Kaufman went about his task in relation to an offence such as "an affront to public decency". Mr Kauf-man said he had looked up the relevant Home Office document to see what an affront to public decency was. "Page 32 gave the example of a man flashing in a busy shopping phantly. But how did the policeman know that a "flush" was imminent. "Does he play safe, and arrest anyone wearing a shabby raincoat" he demanded. "If so, clause 22 of this Bill will be strongly endorsed by Aquascutum and Burberry.'

At that stage, the Tory back bencher, Mr Robert Atkins, produced the rather reasonable and rather disgusting example of a policeman spotting a man about to undo his trousers in the street. Mr Kaufaman, who had after all raised the subject in the first place, rather unreasonably replied: "I haven't got the hon gentleman's mind". It was an example of Mr Kaufinan's skill as a debater.

Mr Atkins's introduction of trousers had played into Mr Kaufman's hands. Mr Kaufman will forgive the metaseen the paragraph before, or the Confederation of British Industry's indicament of British as a shabby and expensive place to live in, where inflation is still too high and public spending is too low, and where if things are getting better, most people can't see it. "The CBI is the Conservative Party in the boardroom", it says. "Some of its delegates are also delegates to the Tory Party Conference. In members faithfully help to finance the party's election campaigns. But for what? Sir Terence forecasts unemployment will keep on rising. He says taxes are too high. So are costs. Money needed to maintain essential services is not being spent. And Britain is now 20 per cent less competitive than it was in the mid-1970s."

The papers

It compares the "dismal story"

compensive than it was in the mid1970s."

It compares the "dismal story"
with the CBI's optimism in the runup to the General Election.

What's to be done about the gloomy picture of Britain painted by CBI Director-General, Sir Terence Beckett? the Daily Star asks. "Spend money, naturally. Sir Terence wants the Government to pump more into the economy to boost public projects like new roads. Fine, up to a point. More capital spending on construction is an excellent way of stimulating economic growth and taking up some of the slack in the dole queues. But Sir Terence also defends industry's dismal record of recent years. He calls for lower recent years. He calls for lower taxes, lower costs, by which he means wages, and lower interest rates." But if he gets all that, where as a whole ceased expecting the Government to wet nurse them."
